EPISTLE TO DR. ARBUTHNOT

BEING THE PROLOGUE TO THE SATIRES.

ADVERTISEMENT.

This paper is a sort of bill of complaint, begun many years since, and drawn up by snatches, as the several occasions offered. I had no thoughts of publishing it, till it pleased some persons¹ of rank and fortune [the authors of "Verses to the Imitator of Horace," and of an "Epistle to a Doctor of Divinity from a Nobleman at Hampton Court"] to attack, in a very extraordinary manner, not only my writings (of which, being public, the public is judge), but my person, morals, and family; whereof, to those who know me not, a truer information may be requisite. Being divided between the necessity to say something of myself, and my own laziness to undertake so awkward a task, I thought it the shortest way to put the last hand to this epistle. If it have any thing pleasing, it will be that by which I am most desirous to please, the truth and the sentiment; and if any thing offensive, it will be only to those I am least sorry to offend, the vicious or the ungenerous.

Many will know their own pictures in it, there being not a circumstance but what is true; but I have, for the most part, spared their names, and they may escape being laughed at if they please.

I would have some of them know it was owing to the request of the learned and candid friend to whom it is inscribed that I make not as free use of theirs as they have done of mine. However, I shall have this advantage and honour on my side, that whereas, by their proceeding, any abuse may be directed at any man, no injury can possibly be done by mine, since a nameless character can never be found out but by its truth and likeness.

P. "SHUT, shut the door, good John!"² fatigued,
I said;

"Tie up the knocker, say I'm sick, I'm dead."

The dog-star rages! nay, 'tis past a doubt

All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out:

Fire in each eye, and papers in each hand,

They rave, recite, and madden round the land.

What walls can guard me, or what shades can hide?

They pierce my thickets, through my grot they glide,

By land, by water, they renew the charge,

They stop the chariot, and they board the barge.

No place is sacred, not the church is free,

E'en Sunday shines no sabbath day to me:

Then from the Mint walks forth the man of rhyme,

Happy to catch me just at dinner time.

Is there a parson much bemus'd in beer,

A maudlin poetess, a rhyming peer,

A clerk foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,

Who pens a stanza when he should engross?

Is there who, lock'd from ink and paper, scrawls

With desperate charcoal round his darken'd walls:

² John Searl, Pope's faithful servant.

All fly to Twit'nam, and in humble strain
Apply to me to keep them mad or vain.
Arthur,³ whose giddy son neglects the laws,
Imputes to me and my damn'd works the cause :
Poor Cornus sees his frantic wife elope,
And curses wit, and poetry, and Pope.

Friend to my life, (which did not you prolong;
The world had wanted many an idle song)
What drop or nostrum can this plague remove?
Or which must end me, a fool's wrath or love?
A dire dilemma! either way I'm sped;
If foes, they write, if friends, they read me dead.
Seiz'd and tied down to judge, how wretched I!
Who can't be silent, and who will not lie.

To laugh were want of goodness and of grace,
And to be grave exceeds all power of face.
I sit with sad civility, I read
With honest anguish and an aching head,
And drop at last, but in unwilling ears,
This saving counsel, "Keep your piece nine years."

"Nine years!" cries he, who, high in Drury Lane,
Lull'd by soft zephyrs through the broken pane,
Rhymes ere he wakes, and prints before term ends,
Oblig'd by hunger and request of friends :
"The piece, you think, is incorrect? why, take it!
I'm all submission: what you'd have it—make it."

Three things another's modest wishes bound,
"My friendship, and a prologue, and ten pound."

³ Arthur Moore, Esq.

Pitholeon sends to me : " You know his grace :
I want a patron ; ask him for a place."

Pitholeon libell'd me—" But here's a letter
Informs you, Sir, 'twas when he knew no better.
Dare you refuse him ? Curll invites to dine,
He'll write a journal,⁴ or he'll turn divine."

Bless me ! a packet.—'Tis a stranger sues,
A virgin tragedy, an orphan Muse.

If I dislike it, " Furies, death, and rage !"

If I approve, " Commend it to the stage."

There (thank my stars) my whole commission ends
The players and I are, luckily, no friends.

Fir'd that the house rejects him, " 'Sdeath, I'll print it,

And shame the fools—your interest, Sir, with Lintot."

Lintot, dull rogue, will think your price too much

" Not, Sir, if you revise it, and retouch."

All my demurs but double his attacks ;

At last he whispers, " Do, and we go snacks."

Glad of a quarrel, straight I clap the door ;

" Sir, let me see your works and you no more."

'Tis sung, when Midas' ears began to spring,
(Midas, a sacred person and a king)

His very minister⁵ who spied them first

(Some say his queen) was forc'd to speak or burst

And is not mine, my friend, a sorer case,

When every coxcomb perks them in my face ?

⁴ The London Journal.

⁵ An allusion to Sir Robert Walpole and Queen Caroline.

A. Good friend, forbear ! you deal in dangerous things ;

I'd never name queens, ministers, or kings ;
 Keep close to ears, and those let asses prick,
 'Tis nothing—P. Nothing ! if they bite and kick ?
 Out with it, Dunciad ! let the secret pass,
 That secret to each fool, that he's an ass :
 The truth once told (and wherefore should we lie ?)
 The queen of Midas slept, and so may I.

You think this cruel ? take it for a rule,
 No creature smarts so little as a fool.
 Let peals of laughter, Codrus, round thee break,
 Thou unconcern'd canst hear the mighty crack :
 Pit, box, and gallery in convulsions hurl'd,
 Thou stand'st unshook amidst a bursting world.
 Who shames a scribbler ? break one cobweb thro',
 He spins the slight self-pleasing thread anew :
 Destroy his fib, or sophistry — in vain !
 The creature's at his dirty work again,
 Thron'd in the centre of his thin designs,
 Proud of a vast extent of flimsy lines.
 Whom have I hurt ? has poet yet or peer
 Lost the arch'd eyebrow or Parnassian sneer ?
 And has not Colley still his lord and whore ?
 His butchers Henley ? ⁶ his freemasons Moore ? ⁷

⁶ Orator Henley declaimed among the butchers in Newport Market and Butcher's Row.

⁷ He used frequently to head the processions of the Free masons.

Does not one table Bavius still admit?
 Still to one bishop⁸ Philips seem a wit?
 Still Sappho—A. Hold! for God's sake—you'll offend.

No names—be calm—learn prudence of a friend
 I too could write, and I am twice as tall;
 But foes like these—P. One flatterer's worse than all.

Of all mad creatures, if the learn'd are right,
 It is the slaver kills, and not the bite.
 A fool quite angry is quite innocent:
 Alas! 'tis ten times worse when they repent.

One dedicates in high heroic prose,
 And ridicules beyond a hundred foes;
 One from all Grub-street will my fame defend,
 And, more abusive, calls himself my friend:
 This prints my letters, that expects a bribe,
 And others roar aloud, "Subscribe, subscribe!"

There are who to my person pay their court:
 I cough like Horace; and, though lean, am short;
 Ammon's great son one shoulder had too high,
 Such Ovid's nose, and "Sir! you have an eye—"
 Go on, obliging creatures! make me see
 All that disgrac'd my betters met in me.
 Say, for my comfort, languishing in bed,
 "Just so immortal Maro held his head:"
 And when I die, be sure you let me know
 Great Homer died three thousand years ago.

Why did I write? what sin to me unknown

⁸ Bishop Boulter, the friend and patron of Ambrose Philips

Dipp'd me in ink, my parents', or my own?
 As yet a child, nor yet a fool to fame,
 I lisp'd in numbers, for the numbers came:
 I left no calling for this idle trade,
 No duty broke, no father disobey'd:
 The Muse but serv'd to ease some friend, not wife,
 To help me through this long disease my life,
 To second, Arbuthnot! thy art and care,
 And teach the being you preserv'd to bear.

A. But why then publish? P. Granville the polite,
 And knowing Walsh, would tell me I could write;
 Well natur'd Garth inflam'd with early praise,
 And Congreve lov'd, and Swift endur'd my lays;
 The courtly Talbot, Somers, Sheffield, read,
 E'en mitred Rochester would nod the head,
 And St. John's self (great Dryden's friends before)
 With open arms receiv'd one poet more.
 Happy my studies, when by these approv'd!
 Happier their author, when by these belov'd!
 From these the world will judge of men and books,
 Not from the Burnets, Oldmixons, and Cooks.

Soft were my numbers; who could take offence
 While pure description held the place of sense?
 Like gentle Fanny's was my flowery theme,
 'A painted mistress, or a purling stream.'
 Yet then did Gildon⁹ draw his venal quill;

⁹ Gildon, who acquired considerable notoriety as a critic, dramatist, &c., grossly abused Pope in some of his writings: see Memoir prefix'd to these volumes, p. lvi., and note on Dunciad, b. i., v. 296.

I wish'd the man a dinner, and sat still.
Yet then did Dennis rave in furious fret;
I never answer'd; I was not in debt.
If want provok'd, or madness made them print,
I wag'd no war with Bedlam or the Mint.

Did some more sober critic come abroad;
If wrong, I smil'd, if right, I kiss'd the rod.
Pains, reading, study, are their just pretence,
And all they want is spirit, taste, and sense.
Commas and points they set exactly right,
And 'twere a sin to rob them of their mite.
Yet ne'er one sprig of laurel grac'd these ribalds,
From slashing Bentley down to piddling Tibbalds:
Each wight who reads not, and but scans and spells,
Each word-catcher that lives on syllables,
E'en such small critics some regard may claim,
Preserv'd in Milton's or in Shakspeare's name.
Pretty! in amber to observe the forms
Of hairs, or straws, or dirt, or grubs, or worms!
'The things, we know, are neither rich nor rare,
But wonder how the devil they got there.

Were others angry: I excus'd them too;
Well might they rage, I gave them but their due.
A man's true merit 'tis not hard to find;
But each man's secret standard in his mind,
That casting weight pride adds to emptiness,
'This who can gratify? for who can guess?
The bard whom pilfer'd pastorals renown,
Who turns a Persian tale for half-a-crown,¹

Just writes to make his barrenness appear,
And strains from hard-bound brains eight lines a year ;

He who still wanting, though he lives on theft,
Steals much, spends little, yet has nothing left ;
And he who now to sense, now nonsense, leaning,
Means not, but blunders round about a meaning :
And he whose fustian's so sublimely bad.

It is not poetry, but prose run mad :

All these my modest satire bade translate,
And own'd that nine such poets made a Tate.
How did they fume, and stamp, and roar, and chafe !
And swear not Addison himself was safe.

Peace to all such ! but were there one whose fires
True genius kindles, and fair fame inspires,
Bless'd with each talent and each art to please,
And born to write, converse, and live with ease ;
Should such a man, too fond to rule alone,
Bear, like the Turk, no brother near the throne ;
View him with scornful, yet with jealous eyes,
And hate for arts that caus'd himself to rise ;
Damn with faint praise, assent with civil leer,
And without sneering teach the rest to sneer ;
Willing to wound, and yet afraid to strike,
Just hint a fault, and hesitate dislike ;
Alike reserv'd to blame or to commend,
A timorous foe, and a suspicious friend ;
Dreading e'en fools ; by flatterers besieg'd,
And so obliging that he ne'er oblig'd ;
Like Cato, give his little senate laws,
And sit attentive to his own applause :

While wits and templars every sentence raise,
 And wonder with a foolish face of praise—
 Who but must laugh if such a man there be?
 Who would not weep, if Atticus² were he?

What though my name stood rubric on the walls
 Or plaster'd posts, with claps, in capitals?
 Or smoking forth, a hundred hawkers load,
 On wings of winds came flying all abroad?
 I sought no homage from the race that write;
 I kept, like Asian monarchs, from their sight:
 Poems I heeded (now berhym'd so long)
 No more than thou, great George! a birthday song.
 I ne'er with wits or witlings pass'd my days
 To spread about the itch of verse and praise;
 Nor like a puppy daggied through the town
 To fetch and carry sing-song up and down;
 Nor at rehearsals sweat, and mouth'd, and cried,
 With handkerchief and orange at my side;
 But sick of fops, and poetry, and prate,
 To Bufo left the whole Castalian state.

Proud as Apollo on his forked hill
 Sat full blown Bufo,³ puff'd by every quill:

² Addison: see Memoir prefixed to these volumes, p. lvi.

³ It seems absurd to suppose, as most of Pope's commentators have done, that Bufo was intended for Lord Halifax. That nobleman died in 1715; the present poem was not printed till 1734; and in the Epilogue to the Satires, Dialogue Second, which appeared in 1738, Pope enumerates him among his most valued friends,

“Thus Somers once, and Halifax were mine.”

See, too, Memoir prefixed to these volumes, p. xlvii.

Fed with soft dedication all day long,
 Horace and he went hand in hand in song.
 His library (where busts of poets dead,
 And a true Pindar stood without a head)
 Receiv'd of wits an undistinguish'd race,
 Who first his judgment ask'd, and then a place.
 Much they extoll'd his pictures, much his seat,
 And flatter'd every day, and some days eat:
 Till grown more frugal in his riper days,
 He paid some bards with port, and some with praise;
 To some a dry rehearsal was assign'd,
 And others (harder still) he paid in kind.
 Dryden alone (what wonder?) came not nigh;
 Dryden alone escap'd this judging eye:
 But still the great have kindness in reserve;
 He help'd to bury whom he help'd to starve.

May some choice patron bless each gray goose
 May every Bavius have his Bufo still! [quill!
 So when a statesman wants a day's defence,
 Or envy holds a whole week's war with sense,
 Or simple pride for flattery makes demands,
 May dunce by dunce be whistled off my hands!
 Bless'd be the great! for those they take away,
 And those they left me—for they left me Gay;
 Left me to see neglected genius bloom,
 Neglected die, and tell it on his tomb:
 Of all thy blameless life the sole return
 My verse, and Queensberry weeping o'er thy urn!

Oh! let me live my own, and die so too!
 (To live and die is all I have to do):

Maintain a poet's dignity and ease,
And see what friends, and read what books I
please ;

Above a patron, though I condescend
Sometimes to call a minister my friend.
I was not born for courts or great affairs ;
I pay my debts, believe, and say my prayers ;
Can sleep without a poem in my head,
Nor know if Dennis be alive or dead.

Why am I ask'd what next shall see the light ?
Heavens ! was I born for nothing but to write ?
Has life no joys for me ? or (to be grave)
Have I no friend to serve, no soul to save ?
" I found him close with Swift"—" Indeed ? no doubt

(Cries prating Balbus) something will come out."
'Tis all in vain, deny it as I will ;
" No, such a genius never can lie still :"
And then for mine obligingly mistakes
The first lampoon Sir Will⁴ or Bubo⁵ makes.
Poor guiltless I ! and can I choose but smile,
When every coxcomb knows me by my style ?

Curst be the verse, how well soe'er it flow,
That tends to make one worthy man my foe,
Give virtue scandal, innocence a fear,
Or from the soft-ey'd virgin steal a tear !
But he who hurts a harmless neighbour's peace,
Insults fall'n worth, or beauty in distress,

⁴ Sir William Young.

⁵ Bubb Dodington, afterwards Lord Melcombe.

Who loves a lie, lame slander helps about,
 Who writes a libel, or who copies out;
 That fop whose pride affects a patron's name,
 Yet absent, wounds an author's honest fame;
 Who can your merit selfishly approve,
 And show the sense of it without the love;
 Who has the vanity to call you friend,
 Yet wants the honour, injur'd, to defend;
 Who tells whate'er you think, whate'er you say,
 And, if he lie not, must at least betray;
 Who to the dean and silver bell can swear,
 And sees at Canons⁶ what was never there;
 Who reads but with a lust to misapply,
 Makes satire a lampoon, and fiction lie:
 A lash like mine no honest man shall dread,
 But all such babbling blockheads in his stead.

Let Sporus⁷ tremble—A. What? that thing of silk,

Sporus, that mere white curd of asses' milk?⁸
 Satire or sense, alas! can Sporus feel?
 Who breaks a butterfly upon a wheel?

P. Yet let me flap this bug with gilded wings,
 This painted⁹ child of dirt, that stinks and stings;

⁶ An allusion to those who endeavoured to persuade the Duke of Chandos that Pope meant to ridicule him under the character of Timon, in the Epistle on Taste: see Memoir prefixed to these volumes, p. lxxxvi.

⁷ Lord Hervey: see Memoir prefixed to these volumes, p. xcii.

⁸ To keep off epilepsy, Lord Hervey lived on ass's milk and biscuits.

⁹ To improve his ghastly complexion, Lord Hervey used a little rouge.

Whose buzz the witty and the fair annoys,
Yet wit ne'er tastes, and beauty ne'er enjoys:
So well-bred spaniels civilly delight
In mumbling of the game they dare not bite.
Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way.
Whether in florid impotence he speaks,
And, as the prompter breathes, the puppet squeaks
Or at the ear of Eve, familiar toad,
Half froth, half venom, spits himself abroad,
In puns, or politics, or tales, or lies,
Or spite, or smut, or rhymes, or blasphemies;
His wit all see-saw between that and this,
Now high, now low, now master up, now miss,
And he himself one vile antithesis.
Amphibious thing! that acting either part,
The trifling head, or the corrupted heart;
Fop at the toilet, flatterer at the board,
Now trips a lady, and now struts a lord.
Eve's tempter thus the rabbins have exprest,
A cherub's face, a reptile all the rest;
Beauty that shocks you, parts that none will trust,
Wit that can creep, and pride that licks the dust.
Not fortune's worshipper, nor fashion's fool,
Not lucre's madman, nor ambition's tool,
Not proud nor servile; be one poet's praise,
'That if he pleas'd, he pleas'd by manly ways;
That flattery, even to kings, he held a shame,
And thought a lie in verse or prose the same;
That not in fancy's maze he wander'd long,
But stoop'd to truth, and moraliz'd his song;

That not for fame, but virtue's better end,
He stood the furious foe, the timid friend,
The damning critic, half approving wit,
The coxcomb hit, or fearing to be hit;
Laugh'd at the loss of friends he never had,
The dull, the proud, the wicked, and the mad;
The distant threats of vengeance on his head,
The blow unfelt, the tear he never shed;
The tale reviv'd, the lie so oft o'erthrown,
Th' imputed trash and dulness not his own;
The morals blacken'd when the writings 'scape,
The libell'd person, and the pictur'd shape;
Abuse on all he lov'd, or lov'd him, spread,
A friend in exile, or a father dead;¹
The whisper, that, to greatness still too near,
Perhaps yet vibrates on his sovereign's ear—
Welcome for thee, fair virtue! all the past:
For thee, fair virtue! welcome even the last!

A. But why insult the poor? affront the great?

P. A knave's a knave to me in every state;
Alike my scorn, if he succeed or fail,
Sporus at court, or Japhet in a jail;
A hireling scribbler, or a hireling peer,
Knight of the post corrupt, or of the shire;
If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his prince's ear, or lose his own.

Yet soft by nature, more a dupe than wit,
 Sappho can tell you how this man was bit :
 This dreaded satirist Dennis will confess
 Foe to his pride, but friend to his distress :
 So humble, he has knock'd at Tibbald's door,
 Has drunk with Cibber, nay, has rhym'd for Moore.
 Full ten years slander'd, did he once reply ?
 Three thousand suns went down on Welsted's lie.²
 To please a mistress one aspers'd his life ;
 He lash'd him not, but let her be his wife :
 Let Budgell charge low Grub-street on his quill,
 And write whate'er he pleas'd, except his will ;³
 Let the two Curlls of town and court⁴ abuse
 His father, mother, body, soul, and muse :
 Yet why ? that father held it for a rule,
 It was a sin to call our neighbour fool ;
 That harmless mother thought no wife a whore :
 Hear this, and spare his family, James Moore !
 Unspotted names, and memorable long,
 If there be force in virtue, or in song.

Of gentle blood⁵ (part shed in honour's cause,

² Welsted asserted in print that Pope had caused a lady's death, and that he had libelled the Duke of Chandos (in the character of Timon), from whom, it was added, he had received five hundred pounds.

³ Budgell was suspected of having forged the will of Dr. Tindal, by which he acquired almost the whole fortune of a man not at all related to him.

⁴ The "Curll of court" means Lord Hervey.

⁵ "Mr. Pope's father," says our author in a note on this passage, "was of a gentleman's family in Oxfordshire, the head of which was the Earl of Downe, whose sole heiress

While yet in Britain honour had applause)
Each parent sprung—A. What fortune, pray?—

P. Their own;

And better got than Bestia's from the throne.
Born to no pride, inheriting no strife,
Nor marrying discord in a noble wife,
Stranger to civil and religious rage,
The good man walk'd innoxious through his age:
No courts he saw, no suits would ever try,
Nor dar'd an oath,⁶ nor hazarded a lie.
Unlearned, he knew no schoolman's subtle art,
No language but the language of the heart.
By nature honest, by experience wise,
Healthy by temperance and by exercise;
His life, though long, to sickness past unknown,
His death was instant and without a groan.
O grant me thus to live, and thus to die!
Who sprung from kings shall know less joy than I.
O friend! may each domestic bliss be thine!
Be no unpleasing melancholy mine:
Me, let the tender office long engage
To rock the cradle of reposing age,
With lenient arts extend a mother's breath,
Make languor smile, and smooth the bed of death;

married the Earl of Lindsay. His mother was the daughter of William Turner, Esq. of York: she had three brothers, one of whom was killed, another died in the service of King Charles; the eldest following his fortunes, and becoming a general officer in Spain, left her what estate remained after the sequestrations and forfeitures of her family."

⁶ Pope's father was a non-juror.

Explore the thought, explain the asking eye,
And keep a while one parent from the sky !
On cares like these if length of days attend,
May Heaven, to bless those days, preserve my friend !

Preserve him social, cheerful, and serene,
And just as rich as when he serv'd a queen.

A. Whether that blessing be denied or given,
Thus far was right ;—the rest belongs to heaven.

SATIRES. EPISTLES. AND ODES OF HORACE.

IMITATED.

Ludentis speciem dabit, et torquebitur.—HOR.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The occasion of publishing these imitations was the clamour raised on some of my Epistles. An answer from Horace was both more full and of more dignity than any I could have made in my own person; and the example of much greater freedom in so eminent a divine as Dr. Donne, seemed a proof with what indignation and contempt a Christian may treat vice or folly, in ever so low or ever so high a station. Both these authors were acceptable to the princes and ministers under whom they lived. The satires of Dr. Donne I versified at the desire of the Earl of Oxford, while he was lord treasurer, and of the Duke of Shrewsbury, who had been secretary of state; neither of whom looked upon a satire on vicious courts as any reflection on those they served in. And indeed there is not in the world a greater error than that which fools are so apt to fall into, and knaves with good reason to encourage,—the mistaking a satirist for a libeller; whereas to a true satirist nothing is so odious as a libeller, for the same reason as to a man truly virtuous nothing is so hateful as a hypocrite.

Uni æquus virtuti atque ejus amicis.

THE FIRST SATIRE OF THE SECOND BOOK
OF HORACE.

TO MR. FORTESCUE.¹

P. THERE are (I scarce can think it, but am told),
There are to whom my satire seems too bold ;
Scarce to wise Peter² complaisant enough,
And something said of Chartres³ much too rough.
The lines are weak, another's pleas'd to say ;
Lord Fanny⁴ spins a thousand such a day.
Timorous by nature, of the rich in awe,
I come to counsel learned in the law :
You'll give me, like a friend both sage and free,
Advice ; and (as you use) without a fee.

F. I'd write no more.

P. Not write ? but then I think,
And for my soul I cannot sleep a wink.
I nod in company, I wake at night ;
Fools rush into my head, and so I write.

F. You could not do a worse thing for your life.
Why, if the night seem tedious—take a wife :
Or rather, truly, if your point be rest,
Lettuce and cowslip wine : probatum est.
But talk with Celsus, Celsus will advise
Hartshorn, or something that shall close your eyes.

² See note², vol. ii. p. 121.

³ See note⁴, vol. ii. p. 75

⁴ Lord Hervey.

Or if you needs must write, write Cæsar's praise :
You'll gain at least a knighthood or the bays.

P. What? like Sir Richard,⁵ rumbling, rough, and fierce,

With arms, and George, and Brunswick, crowd
the verse ;

Rend with tremendous sound your ears asunder,
With gun, drum, trumpet, blunderbuss, and thunder?

Or nobly wild, with Budgell's fire and force,
Paint angels trembling round his falling horse?⁶

F. Then all your Muse's softer art display,
Let Carolina smooth the tuneful lay ;
Lull with Amelia's liquid name the Nine,
And sweetly flow through all the royal line.

P. Alas ! few verses touch their nicer ear ;
They scarce can bear their laureate twice a year ;
And justly Cæsar scorns the poet's lays ;
It is to history he trusts for praise.

F. Better be Cibber, I'll maintain it still,
Than ridicule all taste, blaspheme quadrille,
Abuse the city's best good men in metre,
And laugh at peers that put their trust in Peter.
E'en those you touch not, hate you.

P. What should ail 'em ?

F. A hundred smart in Timon and in Balaam :
The fewer still you name, you wound the more ;
Bond is but one, but Harpax is a score.

⁵ Sir Richard Blackmore.

⁶ At the battle of Oudenard.

P. Each mortal has his pleasure: none deny
 Scarsdale his bottle, Darty⁷ his ham-pie:
 Ridotta sips and dances till she see
 The doubling lustres dance as fast as she:
 F— loves the senate, Hockley-hole his brother,
 Like in all else, as one egg to another.
 I love to pour out all myself as plain
 As downright Shippen,⁸ or as old Montaigne:
 In them, as certain to be lov'd as seen,
 The soul stood forth, nor kept a thought within;
 In me what spots (for spots I have) appear,
 Will prove at least the medium must be clear.
 In this impartial glass my Muse intends
 Fair to expose myself, my foes, my friends;
 Publish the present age; but where my text
 Is vice too high, reserve it for the next;
 My foes shall wish my life a longer date,
 And every friend the less lament my fate.
 My head and heart thus flowing through my quill,
 Verse-man or prose-man, term me which you will,
 Papist or Protestant, or both between,
 Like good Erasmus, in an honest mean,
 In moderation placing all my glory,
 While 'Tories call me Whig, and Whigs a Tory.
 Satire's my weapon, but I'm too discreet
 To run a muck, and tilt at all I meet;

⁷ Dartineuf, a great epicure, with whom Pope appears to have lived on good terms.

⁸ Of this distinguished Member of Parliament, Sir Robert Walpole repeatedly said, that "he was not corruptible."

I only wear it in a land of Hector's,
Thieves, supercargoes, sharpers, and directors.
Save but our army! and let Jove incrust
Swords, pikes, and guns, with everlasting rust!
Peace is my dear delight—not Fleury's more:
But touch me, and no minister so sore.
Whoe'er offends, at some unlucky time
Slides into verse, and hitches in a rhyme,
Sacred to ridicule his whole life long,
And the sad burden of some merry song.

Slander or poison dread from Delia's rage;
Hard words or hanging, if your judge be Page;⁹
From furious Sappho¹ scarce a milder fate,
Pox'd by her love, or libell'd by her hate.
Its proper power to hurt each creature feels;
Bulls aim their horns, and asses lift their heels;
'Tis a bear's talent not to kick, but hug;
And no man wonders he's not stung by pug.
So drink with Walters, or with Chartres eat,
They'll never poison you, they'll only cheat.

Then, learned sir! (to cut the matter short)
Whate'er my fate, or well or ill at court,
Whether old age, with faint but cheerful ray,
Attends to gild the evening of my day,
Or death's black wing already be display'd,
To wrap me in the universal shade;
Whether the darken'd room to muse invite,
Or whiten'd wall provoke the skewer to write;

⁹ Judge Page is said to have treated delinquents rather too roughly.

In durance, exile, Bedlam, or the Mint,
Like Lee or Budgell I will rhyme and print.

F. Alas, young man, your days can ne'er be long :

In flower of age you perish for a song!
Plums and directors, Shylock and his wife,
Will club their testers now to take your life.

P. What? arm'd for virtue when I point the pen,
Brand the bold front of shameless guilty men,
Dash the proud gamester in his gilded car,
Bare the mean heart that lurks beneath a star;
Can there be wanting, to defend her cause,
Lights of the church, or guardians of the laws?
Could pension'd Boileau lash in honest strain
Flatterers and bigots e'en in Louis' reign?
Could laureate Dryden pimp and friar engage,
Yet neither Charles nor James be in a rage?
And I not strip the gilding off a knave,
Unplac'd, unpension'd, no man's heir or slave?
I will, or perish in the generous cause;
Hear this, and tremble! you who 'scape the laws,
Yes, while I live, no rich or noble knave
Shall walk the world in credit to his grave:
To Virtue only and her friends a friend,
The world beside may murmur or commend.
Know, all the distant din that world can keep,
Rolls o'er my grotto, and but soothes my sleep.
There my retreat the best companions grace,
Chiefs out of war, and statesmen out of place:
There St. John mingles with my friendly bowl
The feast of reason and the flow of soul:

And he,² whose lightning pierc'd th' Iberian lines,
 Now forms my quincunx, and now ranks my vines;
 Or tames the genius of the stubborn plain,
 Almost as quickly as he conquer'd Spain.

Envy must own I live among the great,
 No pimp of pleasure, and no spy of state,
 With eyes that pry not, tongue that ne'er repeats,
 Fond to spread friendships, but to cover heats;
 To help who want, to forward who excel;
 This all who know me, know; who love me, tell;
 And who unknown defame me, let them be
 Scribblers or peers, alike are mob to me.
 This is my plea, on this I rest my cause—
 What saith my counsel, learned in the laws?

F. Your plea is good; but still I say, beware!
 Laws are explain'd by men—so have a care.
 It stands on record, that in Richard's times
 A man was hang'd for very honest rhymes.
 Consult the statute; quart. I think it is,
Edwardi sext. or prim. et quint. Eliz.
 See libels, satires—here you have it—read.

P. Libels and satires! lawless things indeed!
 But grave epistles, bringing vice to light,
 Such as a king might read, a bishop write,
 Such as Sir Robert³ would approve—F. Indeed!
 The case is alter'd—you may then proceed:
 In such a cause the plaintiff will be hiss'd,
 My lords the judges laugh, and you're dismiss'd.

² The Earl of Peterborough.

THE SECOND SATIRE OF THE SECOND BOOK
OF HORACE.

TO MR. BETHEL.¹

WHAT, and how great, the virtue and the art
To live on little with a cheerful heart !
(A doctrine sage, but truly none of mine)
Let's talk, my friends, but talk before we dine ;
Not when a gilt buffet's reflected pride
Turns you from sound philosophy aside ;
Not when from plate to plate your eyeballs roll,
And the brain dances to the mantling bowl.

Hear Bethel's sermon, one not vers'd in schools
But strong in sense, and wise without the rules.

"Go work, hunt, exercise ! (he thus began)
Then scorn a homely dinner if you can.
Your wine lock'd up, your butler stroll'd abroad,
Or fish denied (the river yet unthaw'd) ;
If then plain bread and milk will do the feat,
The pleasure lies in you, and not the meat."

Preach as I please, I doubt our curious men
Will choose a pheasant still before a hen ;
Yet hens of Guinea full as good I hold,
Except you eat the feathers green and gold.

Of carps and mullets why prefer the great,
(Though cut in pieces ere my lord can eat)
Yet for small turbot^s such esteem profess?
Because God made these large, the other less.
Oldfield,² with more than harpy throat endued,
Cries, "Send me, gods! a whole hog barbecued!"
O blast it, south winds! till a stench exhale
Rank as the ripeness of a rabbit's tail.
By what criterion do you eat, d'ye think,
If this is priz'd for sweetness, that for stink?
When the tir'd glutton labours through a treat,
He finds no relish in the sweetest meat;
He calls for something bitter, something sour,
And the rich feast concludes extremely poor:
Cheap eggs, and herbs, and olives, still we see;
Thus much is left of old simplicity!
The robin-redbreast till of late had rest,
And children sacred held a martin's nest,
Till becaficos sold so devilish dear
To one that was, or would have been, a peer.
Let me extol a cat on oysters fed;
I'll have a party at the Bedford-head:
Or e'en to crack live crawfish recommend;
I'd never doubt at court to make a friend!
'Tis yet in vain, I own, to keep a pother
About one vice, and fall into the other:
Between excess and famine lies a mean;
Plain, but not sordid, though not splendid, clean.

² A glutton, who ran through a fortune of fifteen hundred a year, by indulging himself in good eating.

Avidien or his wife (no matter which,
For him you'll call a dog, and her a bitch)
Sell their presented partridges and fruits,
And humbly live on rabbits and on roots :
One half-pint bottle serves them both to dine,
And is at once their vinegar and wine :
But on some lucky day (as when they found
A lost bank-bill, or heard their son was drown'd)
At such a feast, old vinegar to spare,
Is what two souls so generous cannot bear :
Oil, though it stink, they drop by drop impart,
But souse the cabbage with a bounteous heart.

He knows to live who keeps the middle state,
And neither leans on this side nor on that ;
Nor stops for one bad cork his butler's pay,
Swears, like Albutius, a good cook away ;
Nor lets, like Nævius, every error pass,
The musty wine, foul cloth, or greasy glass.

Now hear what blessings temperance can bring :
(Thus said our friend, and what he said I sing)
First health : the stomach (cramm'd from every dish,
A tomb of boil'd and roast, and flesh and fish,
Where bile, and wind, and phlegm, and acid, jar,
And all the man is one intestine war)
Remembers oft the schoolboy's simple fare,
The temperate sleeps, and spirits light as air.

How pale each worshipful and reverend guest
Rise from a clergy or a city feast !
What life in all that ample body say ?
What heavenly particle inspires the clay ?

The soul subsides, and wickedly inclines
To seem but mortal e'en in sound divines.

On morning wings how active springs the mind
That leaves the load of yesterday behind!
How easy every labour it pursues!
How coming to the poet every Muse!
Not but we may exceed some holy time,
Or tir'd in search of truth or search of rhyme:
Ill health some just indulgence may engage,
And more the sickness of long life, old age:
For fainting age what cordial drop remains,
If our intemperate youth the vessel drains?

Our fathers prais'd rank venison. You suppose,
Perhaps, young men! our fathers had no nose.
Not so: a buck was then a week's repast,
And 'twas their point, I ween, to make it last;
More pleas'd to keep it till their friends could come,
Than eat the sweetest by themselves at home.
Why had not I in those good times my birth,
Ere coxcomb-pies or coxcombs were on earth?

Unworthy he the voice of fame to hear,
That sweetest music to an honest ear,
(For 'faith, Lord Fanny! you are in the wrong,
The world's good word is better than a song)
Who has not learn'd fresh sturgeon and ham-pie
Are no rewards for want and infamy!
When luxury has lick'd up all thy pelf,
Curs'd by thy neighbours, thy trustees, thyself;
To friends, to fortune, to mankind a shame,
Think how posterity will treat thy name;

And buy a rope, that future times may tell
Thou hast at least bestow'd one penny well.

“Right, (cries his lordship) for a rogue in need
To have a taste is insolence indeed :

In me 'tis noble, suits my birth and state,
My wealth unwieldy, and my heap too great.”
Then, like the sun, let bounty spread her ray,
And shine that superfluity away.

Oh impudence of wealth ! with all thy store
How dar'st thou let one worthy man be poor ?
Shall half the new-built churches round thee fall ?
Make quays, build bridges, or repair Whitehall ;
Or to thy country let that heap be lent,
As M * * o's ³ was, but not at five per cent.

“Who thinks that fortune cannot change her mind,

Prepares a dreadful jest for all mankind.
And who stands safest ? tell me, is it he
That spreads and swells in puff'd prosperity,
Or bless'd with little, whose preventing care
In peace provides fit arms against a war ?”

Thus Bethel spoke, who always speaks his thought,

And always thinks the very thing he ought :
His equal mind I copy what I can,
And as I love, would imitate the man.
In South-Sea days, not happier, when surmis'd
The lord of thousands, than if now excis'd ;

³ A stroke of satire at the avarice of the Duke of Marlborough.

In forest planted by a father's hand,
 Than in five acres now of rented land.
 Content with little, I can piddle here
 On brocoli and mutton round the year;
 But ancient friends (though poor, or out of play)
 That touch my bell, I cannot turn away.
 'Tis true, no turbots dignify my boards,
 But gudgeons, flounders, what my Thames affords:
 To Hounslow Heath I point, and Bansted Down, Thence comes your mutton, and these chicks my own :

From yon old walnut tree a shower shall fall,
 And grapes long lingering on my only wall;
 And figs from standard and espalier join;
 The devil is in you if you cannot dine:
 Then cheerful healths (your mistress shall have place),

And, what's more rare, a poet shall say grace.

Fortune not much of humbling me can boast;
 Though double tax'd, how little have I lost!
 My life's amusements have been just the same,
 Before and after standing armies came.
 My lands are sold, my father's house is gone;
 I'll hire another's; is not that my own—
 And yours, my friends—through whose free opening gate

None comes too early, none departs too late?
 (For I, who hold sage Homer's rule the best, Welcome the coming, speed the going guest.)

“Pray heaven it last! (cries Swift) as you go on;

I wish to God this house had been your own !
Pity ! to build without a son or wife :
Why, you'll enjoy it only all your life."
Well, if the use be mine, can it concern one
Whether the name belong to Pope or Vernon ?⁴
What's property ? dear Swift ! you see it alter
From you to me, from me to Peter Walter ;⁵
Or in a mortgage prove a lawyer's share,
Or in a jointure vanish from the heir ;
Or in pure equity (the case not clear)
The chancery takes your rents for twenty year :
At best it falls to some ungracious son,
Who cries, " My father's damn'd, and all's my own."
Shades,⁶ that to Bacon could retreat afford,
Become the portion of a booby lord ;
And Hemsley, once proud Buckingham's delight,
Slides to a scrivener or a city knight.
Let lands and houses have what lords they will,
Let us be fix'd, and our own masters still.

⁴ Mrs. Vernon, from whom Pope purchased the lease of his house and gardens at Twickenham.

THE SIXTH SATIRE OF THE SECOND BOOK
OF HORACE.

THE FIRST PART IMITATED IN THE YEAR 1714 BY DR. SWIFT;

THE LATTER PART ADDED AFTERWARDS.

I'VE often wish'd that I had clear
For life six hundred pounds a year,
A handsome house to lodge a friend,
A river at my garden's end,
A terrace walk, and half a rood
Of land set out to plant a wood.

Well, now I have all this, and more,
I ask not to increase my store;
But here a grievance seems to lie,
All this is mine but till I die;
I can't but think 'twould sound more clever,
To me and to my heirs for ever.

If I ne'er got or lost a groat
By any trick or any fault;
And if I pray by reason's rules,
And not like forty other fools,
As thus: 'Vouchsafe, O gracious Maker!
To grant me this and t'other acre;
Or, if it be thy will and pleasure,
Direct my plough to find a treasure;
But only what my station fits,
And to be kept in my right wits,

Preserve, almighty Providence!
Just what you gave me, competence;
And let me in these shades compose
Something in verse as true as prose,
Remov'd from all th' ambitious scene,
Nor puff'd by pride, nor sunk by spleen.'

In short, I'm perfectly content,
Let me but live on this side Trent,
Nor cross the channel twice a year,
To spend six months with statesmen here.

I must by all means come to town,
'Tis for the service of the crown;
'Lewis, the Dean will be of use;
Send for him up; take no excuse.'

The toil, the danger of the seas,
Great ministers ne'er think of these;
Or, let it cost five hundred pound,
No matter where the money's found;
It is but so much more in debt,
And that they ne'er consider'd yet.

'Good Mr. Dean, go change your gown,
Let my lord know you're come to town.'
I hurry me in haste away,
Not thinking it is levee day,
And find his honour in a pound,
Hemm'd by a triple circle round,
Chequer'd with ribbons blue and green:
How should I thrust myself between?
Some wag observes me thus perplex'd,
And smiling, whispers to the next,

‘I thought the Dean had been too proud
To jostle here among a crowd.’

Another, in a surly fit,
Tells me I have more zeal than wit;
‘So eager to express your love,
You ne’er consider whom you shove,
But rudely press before a duke.’
I own I’m pleas’d with this rebuke,
And take it kindly meant, to show
What I desire the world should know.

I get a whisper, and withdraw;
When twenty fools I never saw
Come with petitions fairly penn’d,
Desiring I would stand their friend.

This humbly offers me his case—
That begs my interest for a place—
A hundred other men’s affairs,
Like bees, are humming in my ears;
‘To-morrow my appeal comes on,
Without your help the cause is gone.’
‘The duke expects my lord and you
About some great affair at two.’—
‘Put my Lord Bolingbroke in mind
To get my warrant quickly sign’d:
Consider, ’tis my first request.’—
‘Be satisfied, I’ll do my best:’—
Then presently he falls to tease,
‘You may be certain, if you please;
I doubt not, if his lordship knew—
And, Mr. Déan, one word from you.’—

'Tis (let me see) three years and more
(October next it will be four)
Since Harley bid me first attend,
And chose me for an humble friend :
Would take me in his coach to chat,
And question me of this and that ;
As, 'What's o'clock?' and, 'How's the wind?'
'Whose chariot's that we left behind?'
Or gravely try to read the lines
Writ underneath the country signs ;
Or, 'Have you nothing new to-day
From Pope, from Parnell, or from Gay?'
Such tattle often entertains
My lord and me as far as Staines,
As once a week we travel down
To Windsor, and again to town,
Where all that passes inter nos
Might be proclaim'd at Charing-cross.
Yet some I know with envy swell
Because they see me us'd so well.
'How think you of our friend the Dean?
I wonder what some people mean ;
My lord and he are grown so great,
Always together tête-à-tête.
What! they admire him for his jokes—
See but the fortune of some folks!'
There flies about a strange report
Of some express arriv'd at court ;
'I'm stopp'd by all the fools I meet,
And catechis'd in every street.

‘ You, Mr. Dean, frequent the great :
Inform us, will the Emperor treat ?
Or do the prints and papers lie ? ’
‘ Faith, Sir, you know as much as I.’
‘ Ah doctor, how you love to jest !
’Tis now no secret.’—‘ I protest
’Tis one to me.’—‘ Then tell us, pray,
When are the troops to have their pay ? ’
And though I solemnly declare
I know no more than my lord mayor,
They stand amaz’d, and think me grown
The closest mortal ever known.

Thus in a sea of folly tost,
My choicest hours of life are lost ;
Yet always wishing to retreat :
O, could I see my country-seat !
There leaning near a gentle brook,
Sleep, or peruse some ancient book,
And there, in sweet oblivion drown
Those cares that haunt the court and town.
O charming noons ! and nights divine !
Or when I sup, or when I dine,
My friends above, my folks below,
Chatting and laughing all-a-row,
The beans and bacon set before ’em,
The grace-cup serv’d with all decorum ;
Each willing to be pleas’d, and please,
And e’en the very dogs at ease !
Here no man prates of idle things,
How this or that Italian sings,

A neighbour's madness, or his spouse's,
Or what's in either of the houses ;
But something much more our concern,
And quite a scandal not to learn ;
Which is the happier or the wiser,
A man of merit, or a miser ?
Whether we ought to choose our friends
For their own worth or our own ends ?
What good, or better, we may call,
And what the very best of all ?

Our friend Dan Prior told (you know)
A tale extremely à-propos :
Name a town life, and in a trice
He had a story of two mice.
Once on a time (so runs the fable)
A country mouse, right hospitable,
Receiv'd a town mouse at his board,
Just as a farmer might a lord.
A frugal mouse, upon the whole,
Yet lov'd his friend, and had a soul ;
Knew what was handsome, and would do't,
On just occasion, coûte que coûte.
He brought him bacon, (nothing lean,)
Pudding that might have pleas'd a dean ;
Cheese, such as men in Suffolk make,
But wish'd it Stilton for his sake ;
Yet, to his guest though no way sparing,
He ate himself the rind and paring.
Our courtier scarce could touch a bit,
But show'd his breeding and his wit ;

He did his best to seem to eat,
And cried, 'I vow you're mighty neat:
But lord, my friend, this savage scene!
For God's sake come and live with men:
Consider, mice, like men, must die,
Both small and great, both you and I;
Then spend your life in joy and sport,
(This doctrine, friend, I learn'd at court.)

The veriest hermit in the nation
May yield, God knows, to strong temptation.
Away they came, through thick and thin,
To a tall house near Lincoln's-inn,
('Twas on the night of a debate,
When all their lordships had sat late).

Behold the place where if a poet
Shin'd in description he might show it;
Tell how the moonbeam trembling falls,
And tips with silver all the walls;
Palladian walls, Venetian doors,
Grotesco roofs, and stucco floors:
But let it (in a word) be said,
The moon was up, and men a-bed,
The napkins white, the carpet red:
The guests withdrawn had left the treat,
And down the mice sat tête-à-tête.

Our courtier walks from dish to dish,
Tastes for his friend of fowl and fish;
Tells all their names, lays down the law,
'Que ça est bon! Ah, goutez ça!
That jelly's rich, this malmsey healing,

Pray, dip your whiskers and your tail in '
Was ever such a happy swain!
He stuffs and swills, and stuffs again.
' I'm quite asham'd—'tis mighty rude
To eat so much—but all's so good—
I have a thousand thanks to give—
My lord alone knows how to live.'
No sooner said, but from the hall
Rush chaplain, butler, dogs, and all:
' A rat, a rat! clap to the door'—
The cat comes bouncing on the floor.
O for the art of Homer's mice,
Or gods to save them in a trice!
(It was by Providence, they think,
For your damn'd stucco has no chink)
' An't please your honour,' quoth the peasant,
' This same dessert is not so pleasant:
Give me again my hollow tree,
A crust of bread, and liberty!'

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF THE FIRST BOOK
OF HORACE.

TO LORD BOLINGBROKE.

ST. JOHN, whose love indulg'd my labours past,
Matures my present, and shall bound my last,
Why will you break the sabbath of my days?
Now sick alike of envy and of praise.

Public too long, ah ! let me hide my age :
See modest Cibber now has left the stage :
Our generals now, retir'd to their estates,
Hang their old trophies o'er the garden gates ;
In life's cool evening satiate of applause,
Nor fond of bleeding e'en in Brunswick's cause.

A voice there is, that whispers in my ear,
('Tis reason's voice, which sometimes one can hear,)
' Friend Pope ! be prudent, let your Muse take
And never gallop Pegasus to death ; [breath,
Lest stiff and stately, void of fire or force,
You limp, like Blackmore, on a lord mayor's horse.'

Farewell then verse, and love, and every toy,
The rhymes and rattles of the man or boy ;
What right, what true, what fit, we justly call,
Let this be all my care—for this is all ;
To lay this harvest up, and hoard with haste
What every day will want, and most the last.

But ask not to what doctors I apply ;
Sworn to no master, of no sect am I :
As drives the storm, at any door I knock,
And house with Montaigne now, or now with Locke
Sometimes a patriot, active in debate,
Mix with the world, and battle for the state ;
Free as young Lyttleton, her cause pursue,
Still true to virtue, and as warm as true :
Sometimes with Aristippus or St. Paul,
Indulge my candour, and grow all to all ;
Back to my native moderation slide,
And win my way by yielding to the tide.

Long as to him who works for debt the day,
Long as the night to her whose love's away,
Long as the year's dull circle seems to run
When the brisk minor pants for twenty-one;
So slow th' unprofitable moments roll
That lock up all the functions of my soul,
That keep me from myself, and still delay
Life's instant business to a future day;
That task which, as we follow or despise,
The eldest is a fool, the youngest wise;
Which done, the poorest can no wants endure;
And which not done, the richest must be poor.

Late as it is, I put myself to school,
And feel some comfort not to be a fool.
Weak though I am of limb, and short of sight,
Far from a lynx, and not a giant quite,
I'll do what Mead and Cheselden¹ advise,
To keep these limbs, and to preserve these eyes.
Not to go back is somewhat to advance,
And men must walk, at least, before they dance.

Say, does thy blood rebel, thy bosom move
With wretched avarice, or as wretched love?
Know there are words and spells which can control
Between the fits, this fever of the soul;
Know there are rhymes which, fresh and fresh applied,
Will cure the arrantest puppy of his pride.
Be furious, envious, slothful, mad, or drunk,
Slave to a wife, or vassal to a punk,

A Switz, a High-Dutch or a Low-Dutch bear;
All that we ask is but a patient ear.

'Tis the first virtue vices to abhor,
And the first wisdom to be fool no more:
But to the world no bugbear is so great
As want of figure and a small estate.
To either India see the merchant fly,
Scar'd at the spectre of pale poverty!
See him with pains of body, pangs of soul,
Burn through the tropic, freeze beneath the pole!
Wilt thou do nothing for a nobler end,
Nothing to make philosophy thy friend?
To stop thy foolish views, thy long desires,
And ease thy heart of all that it admires?
Here Wisdom calls, 'Seek virtue first, be bold!
As gold to silver, virtue is to gold.'
There London's voice, 'Get money, money still!
And then let virtue follow if she will.'
This, this the saving doctrine preach'd to all,
From low St. James's up to high St. Paul;
From him whose quills stand quiver'd at his ear,
To him who notches sticks at Westminster.

Barnard² in spirit, sense, and truth abounds;
'Pray then what wants he?' Fourscore thousand
A pension, or such harness for a slave [pounds;
As Bug now has, and Dorimant would have.
Barnard, thou art a cit, with all thy worth;
But Bug and D^{*1} their Honours! and so forth.

² Sir John Barnard, Knight; a citizen eminent for his public spirit and talents in parliament.

Yet every child another song will sing,
 'Virtue, brave boys! 'tis virtue makes a king.'
 True, conscious honour is to feel no sin;
 He's armed without that's innocent within:
 Be this thy screen, and this thy wall of brass;
 Compar'd to this a minister's an ass.

And say, to which shall our applause belong,
 This new court jargon, or the good old song?
 The modern language of corrupted peers,
 Or what was spoke at Cressy and Poictiers?
 Who counsels best? who whispers, 'Be but great.
 With praise or infamy leave that to fate;
 Get place and wealth, if possible, with grace;
 If not, by any means get wealth and place:' —
 (For what? to have a box where eunuchs sing,
 And foremost in the circle eye a king?)
 Or he who bids thee face with steady view
 Proud fortune, and look shallow greatness through,
 And, while he bids thee, sets th' example too?
 If such a doctrine, in St. James's air,
 Should chance to make the well-dress'd rabble
 stare;

If honest Sz take scandal at a spark
 That less admires the palace than the park;
 Faith, I shall give the answer Reynard gave:
 'I cannot like, dread sir! your royal cave;
 Because I see, by all the tracks about,
 Full many a beast goes in, but none come out.'
 Adieu to virtue, if you're once a slave:
 Send her to court, you send her to her grave.

Well, if a king's a lion, at the least
The people are a many-headed beast;
Can they direct what measures to pursue
Who know themselves so little what to do?
Alike in nothing but one lust of gold,
Just half the land would buy, and half be sold:
Their country's wealth our mightier misers drain,
Or cross, to plunder provinces, the main;
The rest, some farm the poor-box, some the pews;
Some keep assemblies, and would keep the stews;
Some with fat bucks on childless dotards fawn;
Some win rich widows by their chine and brawn;
While with the silent growth of ten per cent.,
In dirt and darkness, hundreds stink content.

Of all these ways, if each pursues his own,
Satire, be kind, and let the wretch alone;
But show me one who has it in his power
To act consistent with himself an hour.
Sir Job sail'd forth, the evening bright and still,
'No place on earth (he cried) like Greenwich hill!'
Up starts a palace: lo, the obedient base
Slopes at its foot, the woods its sides embrace,
The silver Thames reflects its marble face.
Now let some whimsey, or that devil within Which guides all those who know not what they mean,

But give the knight (or give his lady) spleen;
Away, away! take all your scaffolds down,
For snug's the word: my dear! we'll live in town.'

At amorous Flavio is the stocking thrown?
That very night he longs to lie alone.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter.
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr.
Did ever Proteus, Merlin, any witch,
Transform themselves so strangely as the rich?
Well, but the poor—the poor have the same itch:
They change their weekly barber, weekly news,
Prefer a new japanner to their shoes,
Discharge their garrets, move their beds, and run
(They know not whither) in a chaise and one;
They hire their sculler, and when once aboard
Grow sick, and damn the climate—like a lord.

You laugh, half beau, half sloven, if I stand,
My wig all powder, and all snuff' my band;
You laugh if coat and breeches strangely vary,
White gloves, and linen worthy Lady Mary!
But when no prelate's lawn, with hair-shirt lin'd,
Is half so incoherent as my mind,
When (each opinion with the next at strife,
One ebb and flow of follies all my life)
I plant, root up, I build, and then confound;
Turn round to square, and square again to round;
You never change one muscle of your face,
You think this madness but a common case;
Nor once to chancery nor to Hale apply,
Yet hang your lip to see a seam awry!
Careless how ill I with myself agree,
Kind to my dress, my figure,—not to me.
Is this my guide, philosopher, and friend?
This he who loves me, and who ought to mend?
Who ought to make me (what he can, or none)
That man divine whom wisdom calls her own;

Great without title, without fortune bless'd;
 Rich e'en when plunder'd, honour'd while oppress'd;
 Lov'd without youth, and follow'd without power;
 At home though exil'd, free though in the Tower;
 In short, that reasoning, high, immortal thing,
 Just less than Jove, and much above a king;
 Nay, half in heaven—except (what's mighty odd)
 A fit of vapours clouds this demigod.

THE SIXTH EPISTLE OF THE FIRST BOOK
 OF HORACE.

TO MR. MURRAY.¹

'NOT to admire, is all the art I know,
 To make men happy, and to keep them so.'
 (Plain truth, dear Murray! needs no flowers of speech,
 So take it in the very words of Creech.)

This vault of air, this congregated ball,
 Self-centred sun, and stars that rise and fall,
 There are, my friend! whose philosophic eyes
 Look through, and trust the Ruler with his skies;
 To him commit the hour, the day, the year,
 And view this dreadful all—without a fear.

Admire we then what earth's low entrails hold,
Arabian shores, or Indian seas infold ;
All the mad trade of fools and slaves for gold ?
Or popularity ? or stars and strings ?
The mob's applauses, or the gifts of kings ?
Say with what eyes we ought at courts to gaze,
And pay the great our homage of amaze ?

If weak the pleasure that from these can spring,
The fear to want them is as weak a thing :
Whether we dread, or whether we desire,
In either case, believe me, we admire :
Whether we joy or grieve, the same the curse,
Surpris'd at better, or surpris'd at worse.
Thus good or bad, to one extreme betray
Th' unbalance'd mind, and snatch the man away ;
For virtue's self may too much zeal be had ;
The worst of madmen is a saint run mad.

Go then, and if you can, admire the state
Of beaming diamonds and reflected plate ;
Procure a taste to double the surprise,
And gaze on Parian charms with learned eyes ;
Be struck with bright brocade or Tyrian dye,
Our birthday nobles' splendid livery.
If not so pleas'd, at council-board rejoice
To see their judgments hang upon thy voice ;
From morn to night, at senate, rolls, and hall,
Plead much, read more, dine late, or not at all.
But wherefore all this labour, all this strife ?
For fame, for riches, for a noble wife ?

Shall one whom nature, learning, birth, conspir'd
 To form, not to admire, but be admir'd,
 Sigh while his Chloe, blind to wit and worth,
 Weds the rich dulness of some son of earth?
 Yet time ennobles or degrades each line;
 It brighten'd Craggs's,² and may darken thine.
 And what is fame? the meanest have their day:
 The greatest can but blaze and pass away.
 Grac'd as thou art with all the power of words,
 So known, so honour'd, at the House of Lords:
 Conspicuous scene! another yet is nigh,
 (More silent far,) where kings and poets lie;
 Where Murray (long enough his country's pride)
 Shall be no more than Tully or than Hyde!

Rack'd with sciatics, martyr'd with the stone,
 Will any mortal let himself alone?
 See Ward,³ by batter'd beaus invited over,
 And desperate misery lays hold on Dover.
 The case is easier in the mind's disease;
 There all men may be cur'd whene'er they please.
 Would ye be bless'd? despise low joys, low gains;
 Disdain whatever Cornbury disdains;
 Be virtuous, and be happy for your pains.

But art thou one whom new opinions sway,
 One who believes as Tindal leads the way?
 Who virtue and a church alike disowns,
 Thinks that but words, and this but brick and stones?

² Whose father had been originally in a low situation.

³ Famous for his quack medicines: so was Dover.

Fly then on all the wings of wild desire,
Admire whate'er the maddest can admire.
Is wealth thy passion? hence! from pole to pole,
Where winds can carry, or where waves can roll;
For Indian spices, for Peruvian gold,
Prevent the greedy, and outbid the bold:
Advance thy golden mountain to the skies;
On the broad base of fifty thousand rise;
Add one round hundred, and (if that's not fair)
Add fifty more, and bring it to a square:
For, mark th' advantage; just so many score
Will gain a wife with half as many more,
Procure her beauty, make that beauty chaste,
And then such friends—as cannot fail to last.
A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis⁴ birth.
(Believe me, many a German prince is worse,
Who proud of pedigree is poor of purse.)
His wealth brave Timon gloriously confounds;
Ask'd for a groat, he gives a hundred pounds;
Or if three ladies like a luckless play,
Takes the whole house upon the poet's day.
Now, in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word you must be rich indeed:
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves;
Something which for your honour they may cheat,
And which it much becomes you to forget.

⁴ Garter king at arms.

If wealth alone then make and keep us blest,
Still, still be getting ; never, never rest.

But if to power and place your passion lie,
If in the pomp of life consist the joy ;
Then hire a slave, or (if you will) a lord,
To do the honours, and to give the word ;
Tell at your levee, as the crowds approach,
To whom to nod, whom take into your coach,
Whom honour with your hand ; to make remarks,
Who rules in Cornwall, or who rules in Berks :
'This may be troublesome, is near the chair ;
That makes three members, this can choose a mayor.'

Instructed thus, you bow, embrace, protest,
Adopt him son, or cousin at the least,
Then turn about, and laugh at your own jest.

Or if your life be one continued treat,
If to live well means nothing but to eat ;
Up, up ! cries Gluttony, 'tis break of day,
Go drive the deer, and drag the finny prey :
With hounds and horns go hunt an appetite—
So Russel did, but could not eat at night ;
Call'd happy dog the beggar at his door,
And envied thirst and hunger to the poor.

Or shall we every decency confound,
Through taverns, stews, and bagnios, take our round ?

Go dine with Chartres, in each vice outdo
Kl's lewd cargo, or Tyy's crew,
From Latian Syrens, French Circæan feasts,

Return well travell'd, and transform'd to beasts;
Or for a titled punk, or foreign flame,
Renounce our country, and degrade our name?

If, after all, we must with Wilmot⁶ own
The cordial drop of life is love alone,
And Swift cry wisely, 'Vive la bagatelle!'
The man that loves and laughs must sure do well
Adieu—if this advice appear the worst,
E'en take the counsel which I gave you first:
Or better precepts if you can impart,
Why do; I'll follow them with all my heart.

THE SEVENTH EPISTLE OF THE FIRST BOOK
OF HORACE.

IN THE MANNER OF DR. SWIFT.

'Tis true, my lord, I gave my word
I would be with you June the third;
Chang'd it to August, and (in short)
Have kept it—as you do at court.
You humour me when I am sick,
Why not when I am splenetic?
In town what objects could I meet?
The shops shut up in every street,
And funerals blackening all the doors,
And yet more melancholy whores:

⁶ Earl of Rochester.

And what a dust in every place !
And a thin court that wants your face,
And fevers raging up and down,
And W* and H both in town !

‘ The dogdays are no more the case.’

’Tis true, but winter comes apace :
Then southward let your bard retire,
Hold out some months ’twixt sun and fire,
And you shall see the first warm weather
Me and the butterflies together.

My lord, your favours well I know ;
’Tis with distinction you bestow,
And not to every one that comes,
Just as a Scotchman does his plums.
‘ Pray take them, sir—enough’s a feast :
Eat some, and pocket up the rest :’
What, rob your boys ? those pretty rogues !
‘ No, sir, you’ll leave them to the hogs.’
Thus fools with compliments besiege ye,
Contriving never to oblige ye.
Scatter your favours on a fop,
Ingratitude’s the certain crop ;
And ’tis but just, I’ll tell ye wherefore
You give the things you never care for.
A wise man always is, or should,
Be mighty ready to do good,
But makes a difference in his thought
Betwixt a guinea and a groat.

Now this I’ll say, you’ll find in me
A safe companion, and a free ;

But if you'd have me always near,
A word, pray, in your honour's ear:
I hope it is your resolution
To give me back my constitution,
The sprightly wit, the lively eye,
Th' engaging smile, the gayety
That laugh'd down many a summer sun,
And kept you up so oft till one;
And all that voluntary vein,
As when Belinda rais'd my strain.

A weasel once made shift to slink
In at a corn-loft through a chink,
But having amply stuff'd his skin,
Could not get out as he got in;
Which one belonging to the house
('Twas not a man, it was a mouse,)
Observing, cried, 'You 'scape not so;
Lean as you came, sir, you must go.'
Sir, you may spare your application;
I'm no such beast, nor his relation,
Nor one that temperance advance,
Cramm'd to the throat with ortolans;
Extremely ready to resign
All that may make me none of mine.
South-sea subscriptions take who please,
Leave me but liberty and ease:
'Twas what I said to Craggs and Child,
Who prais'd my modesty, and smil'd.
'Give me, I cried (enough for me),
My bread and independency!'

So bought an annual rent or two,
And liv'd—just as you see I do ;
Near fifty, and without a wife,
I trust that sinking fund, my life.
Can I retrench? Yes, mighty well,
Shrink back to my paternal cell,
A little house, with trees a row,
And, like its master, very low ;
There died my father, no man's debtor,
And there I'll die, nor worse nor better.

To set this matter full before ye,
Our old friend Swift will tell his story.

' Harley, the nation's great support'—
But you may read it, I stop short.

THE FIRST EPISTLE OF THE SECOND BOOK OF HORACE.

ADVERTISEMENT.

The reflections of Horace, and the judgments passed in his epistle to Augustus, seemed so seasonable to the present times, that I could not help applying them to the use of my own country. The author thought them considerable enough to address them to his prince, whom he paints with all the great and good qualities of a monarch upon whom the Romans depended for the increase of an absolute empire; but to make the poem entirely English, I was willing to add one or two of those which contribute to the happiness of a free people, and are more consistent with the welfare of our neighbours.

This epistle will show the learned world to have fallen into two mistakes: one, that Augustus was a patron of poets in general; whereas he not only prohibited all but the best writers to name him, but recommended that care even to the civil magistrate; Admonuit prætores, ne paterentur nomen suum obsolescere, &c.; the other, that this piece was only a general discourse of poetry; whereas it was an apology for the poets, in order to render Augustus more their patron. Horace here pleads the cause of his contemporaries; first, against the taste of the town, whose humour it was to magnify the authors of the preceding age; secondly, against the court and nobility, who encouraged only the writers for the theatre; and, lastly, against the emperor himself, who had conceived them of little use to the government. He shows (by a view of the progress of learning, and the change of taste among the Romans) that the introduction of the polite arts of Greece had given the writers of his time great advantages over their predecessors; that their morals were much improved, and the license of those ancient poets restrained; that satire and comedy were become more just and useful; that whatever extravagancies were left on the stage were owing to the ill taste of the nobility; that poets, under due regulations, were in many respects useful to the state; and concludes, that it was upon them the emperor himself must depend for his fame with posterity.

We may further learn from this epistle, that Horace made his court to this great prince, by writing with a decent freedom toward him, with a just contempt of his low flatterers, and with a manly regard to his own character.

TO AUGUSTUS.¹

WHILE you, great patron of mankind! sustain
The balanc'd world, and open all the main;
Your country, chief, in arms abroad defend,
At home with morals, arts, and laws amend;
How shall the muse, from such a monarch, steal
An hour, and not defraud the public weal?

Edward and Henry, now the boast of fame,
And virtuous Alfred, a more sacred name,
After a life of generous toils endur'd—
The Gaul subdued, or property secur'd,
Ambition humbled, mighty cities storm'd,
Or laws establish'd, and the world reform'd—
Clos'd their long glories with a sigh, to find
Th' unwilling gratitude of base mankind!
All human virtue, to its latest breath,
Finds envy never conquer'd but by death.

The great Alcides, every labour past,
Had still this monster to subdue at last :
Sure fate of all, beneath whose rising ray
Each star of meaner merit fades away !
Oppress'd we feel the beam directly beat ;
Those suns of glory please not till they set.

To thee the world its present homage pays,
The harvest early, but mature the praise :
Great friend of liberty ! in kings a name
Above all Greek, above all Roman fame ;
Whose word is truth, as sacred and rever'd
As Heaven's own oracles from altars heard.
Wonder of kings ! like whom to mortal eyes
None e'er has risen, and none e'er shall rise.

Just in one instance, be it yet confest
Your people, sir, are partial in the rest ;
Foes to all living worth except your own,
And advocates for folly dead and gone.
Authors, like coins, grow dear as they grow old ;
It is the rust we value, not the gold.
Chaucer's worst ribaldry is learn'd by rote,
And beastly Skelton heads of houses quote ;
One likes no language but the Faery Queen ;
A Scot will fight for Christ's Kirk o' the Green ;
And each true Briton is to Ben so civil,
He swears the Muses met him at the Devil.²

Though justly Greece her eldest sons admires,
Why should not we be wiser than our sires ?

² The Devil Tavern.

In every public virtue we excel,
 We build, we paint, we sing, we dance, as well ;
 And learned Athens to our art must stoop,
 Could she behold us tumbling through a hoop.

If time improve our wit as well as wine,
 Say at what age a poet grows divine?
 Shall we, or shall we not, account him so
 Who died, perhaps, a hundred years ago?
 End all dispute ; and fix the year precise
 When British bards begin t' immortalize?

' Who lasts a century can have no flaw ;
 I hold that wit a classic, good in law.'

Suppose he wants a year, will you compound ?
 And shall we deem him ancient, right and sound,
 Or damn to all eternity at once
 At ninety-nine a modern and a dunce ?

' We shall not quarrel for a year or two ;
 By courtesy of England he may do.'

Then by the rule that made the horsetail bare,
 I pluck out year by year, as hair by hair,
 And melt down ancients like a heap of snow,
 While you, to measure merits, look in Stowe,
 And estimating authors by the year,
 Bestow a garland only on a bier. [bill

Shakspeare (whom you and every playhouse Style the divine ! the matchless ! what you will)
 For gain, not glory, wing'd his roving flight,
 And grew immortal in his own despite.
 Ben, old and poor, as little seem'd to heed
 The life to come in every poet's creed.

Who now reads Cowley? if he pleases yet,
His moral pleases, not his pointed wit:
Forgot his Epic, nay, Pindaric art,
But still I love the language of his heart.

‘ Yet surely, surely these were famous men!
What boy but hears the sayings of old Ben?
In all debates where critics bear a part,
Not one but nods, and talks of Jonson’s art,
Of Shakspeare’s nature, and of Cowley’s wit;
How Beaumont’s judgment check’d what Fletcher writ;

How Shadwell hasty, Wycherley was slow;
But for the passions, Southerne sure, and Rowe!
These, only these, support the crowded stage,
From eldest Heywood down to Cibber’s age.’

All this may be; the people’s voice is odd;
It is, and it is not, the voice of God.
To Gammer Gurton if it give the bays,
And yet deny the Careless Husband^s praise,
Or say our fathers never broke a rule;
Why then, I say, the public is a fool.
But let them own that greater faults than we
They had, and greater virtues, I’ll agree.
Spenser himself affects the obsolete,
And Sidney’s verse halts ill on Roman feet;
Milton’s strong pinion now not heaven can bound,
Now, serpent-like, in prose he sweeps the ground
In quibbles angel and archangel join,
And God the Father turns a school-divine.

^s A comedy by Colley Cibber.

Not that I'd lop the beauties from his book,
Like slashing Bentley with his desperate hook ;
Or damn all Shakspeare, like th' affected fool
At court, who hates whate'er he read at school.

But for the wits of either Charles's days,
The mob of gentlemen who wrote with ease ;
Sprat, Carew, Sedley, and a hundred more,
(Like twinkling stars the Miscellanies o'er,)
One simile that solitary shines
In the dry desert of a thousand lines,
Or lengthen'd thought, that gleams through many a page,

Has sanctified whole poems for an age.
I lose my patience, and I own it too,
When works are censur'd, not as bad, but new ;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
These fools demand not pardon, but applause.

On Avon's bank, where flowers eternal blow,
If I but ask if any weed can grow,
One tragic sentence if I dare deride,
Which Betterton's grave action dignified,
Or well mouth'd Booth with emphasis proclaims,
(Though but perhaps a muster-roll of names,)
How will our fathers rise up in a rage,
And swear all shame is lost in George's age !
You'd think no fools disgrac'd the former reign,
Did not some grave examples yet remain,
Who scorn a lad should teach his father skill,
And having once been wrong, will be so still.
He who, to seem more deep than you or I,

Extols old bards, or Merlin's prophecy,
Mistake him not ; he envies, not admires,
And to debase the sons exalts the sires.
Had ancient times conspir'd to disallow
What then was new, what had been ancient now ?
Or what remain'd, so worthy to be read
By learned critics of the mighty dead ?

In days of ease, when now the weary sword
Was sheath'd, and luxury with Charles restor'd,
In every taste of foreign courts improv'd,
'All by the king's example liv'd and lov'd.'⁴
Then peers grew proud in horsemanship t' excel,
Newmarket's glory rose, as Britain's fell ;
The soldier breath'd the gallantries of France,
And every flowery courtier writ romance.
Then marble, soften'd into life, grew warm,
And yielding metal flow'd to human form ;
Lely on animated canvas stole
The sleepy eye, that spoke the melting soul.
No wonder then, when all was love and sport,
The willing Muses werè debauch'd at court ;
On each enervate string they taught the note
To pant, or tremble through a eunuch's throat.

But Britain, changeful as a child at play,
Now calls in princes, and now turns away.
Now whig, now tory, what we lov'd we hate ;
Now all for pleasure, now for church and state ;
Now for prerogatives, and now for laws ;
Effects unhappy, from a noble cause.

⁴ A verse of Lord Lansdown.

Time was, a sober Englishman would knock
 His servants up, and rise by five o'clock ;
 Instruct his family in every rule,
 And send his wife to church, his son to school.
 To worship like his fathers was his care ;
 To teach their frugal virtues to his heir ;
 To prove that luxury could never hold,
 And place on good security his gold.
 Now times are chang'd, and one poetic itch
 Has seiz'd the court and city, poor and rich ;
 Sons, sires, and grandsires, all will wear the bays ;
 Our wives read Milton, and our daughters plays ;
 To theatres and to rehearsals throng,
 And all our grace at table is a song.
 I, who so oft renounce the Muses, lie :
 Not 's self e'er tells more fibs than I.
 When sick of Muse, our follies we deplore,
 And promise our best friends to rhyme no more,
 We wake next morning in a raging fit,
 And call for pen and ink to show our wit.

He serv'd a 'prenticeship who sets up shop ;
 Ward⁵ tried on puppies and the poor his drop ;
 E'en Radcliff's doctors travel first to France,
 Nor dare to practise till they've learn'd to dance.
 Who builds a bridge that never drove a pile ?
 (Should Ripley⁶ venture, all the world would smile)

But those who cannot write, and those who can,
 All rhyme, and scrawl, and scribble, to a man.

⁵ See note 2, p. 49.

⁶ See note 2, vol. ii. p. 134.

Yet, sir, reflect; the mischief is not great;
 These madmen never hurt the church or state:
 Sometimes the folly benefits mankind,
 And rarely avarice taints the tuneful mind.
 Allow him but his plaything of a pen,
 He ne'er rebels, or plots, like other men:
 Flight of cashiers,⁷ or mobs, he'll never mind,
 And knows no losses while the Muse is kind.
 To cheat a friend or ward, he leaves to Peter;⁸
 The good man heaps up nothing but mere metre;
 Enjoys his garden and his book in quiet;
 And then—a perfect hermit in his diet.

Of little use the man you may suppose
 Who says in verse what others say in prose;
 Yet let me show a poet's of some weight,
 And (though no soldier) useful to the state.
 What will a child learn sooner than a song?
 What better teach a foreigner the tongue—
 What's long or short, each accent where to place,
 And speak in public with some sort of grace?
 I scarce can think him such a worthless thing,
 Unless he praise some monster of a king;
 Or virtue or religion turn to sport,
 To please a lewd or unbelieving court.
 Unhappy Dryden!—In all Charles's days
 Roscommon only boasts unspotted bays;
 And in our own (excuse some courtly stains)

⁷ Knight, cashier of the South Sea Company, fled into France, on the bursting of that bubble.

⁸ See note 2, vol. ii. p. 121.

No whiter page than Addison remains,
 He from the taste obscene reclaims our youth,
 And sets the passions on the side of truth,
 Forms the soft bosom with the gentlest art,
 And pours each human virtue in the heart.
 Let Ireland tell how wit upheld her cause,
 Her trade supported, and supplied her laws ;
 And leave on Swift this grateful verse engrav'd,
 ' The rights a court attack'd, a poet sav'd.' ⁵
 Behold the hand that wrought a nation's cure,
 Stretch'd to relieve the idiot and the poor ;
 Proud vice to brand, or injur'd worth adorn,
 And stretch the ray to ages yet unborn.
 Not but there are, who merit other palms ;
 Hopkins and Sternhold glad the heart with psalms ;
 The boys and girls whom charity maintains
 Implore your help in these pathetic strains :
 How could devotion touch the country pews
 Unless the gods bestow'd a proper muse ?
 Verse cheers their leisure, verse assists their work,
 Verse prays for peace, or sings down pope and Turk.
 The silenc'd preacher yields to potent strain,
 And feels that grace his prayer besought in vain ;
 The blessing thrills thro' all the labouring throng,
 And heaven is won by violence of song.

Our rural ancestors, with little blest,
 Patient of labour when the end was rest,
 Indulg'd the day that hous'd their annual grain

⁵ This passage drew down on Pope threats of a prosecution.

With feasts, and offerings, and a thankful strain.
The joy their wives, their sons, and servants share
Ease of their toil, and partners of their care :
The laugh, the jest, attendants on the bowl,
Smooth'd every brow, and open'd every soul :
With growing years the pleasing license grew,
And taunts alternate innocently flew.
But times corrupt, and nature, ill inclin'd,
Produc'd the point that left a sting behind ;
Till friend with friend, and families at strife,
Triumphant malice rag'd through private life.
Who felt the wrong, or fear'd it, took th' alarm,
Appeal'd to law, and Justice lent her arm.
At length by wholesome dread of statutes bound,
The poets learn'd to please, and not to wound :
Most warp'd to flattery's side ; but some, more nice,
Preserv'd the freedom, and forbore the vice.
Hence Satire rose, that just the medium hit,
And heals with morals what it hurts with wit.
We conquer'd France, but felt our captive's charms ;
Her arts victorious triumph'd o'er our arms ;
Britain to soft refinements less a foe,
Wit grew polite, and numbers learn'd to flow.
Waller was smooth ; but Dryden taught to join
The varying verse, the full resounding line,
The long majestic march, and energy divine :
Though still some traces of our rustic vein
And splay-foot verse remain'd, and will remain.
Late, very late, correctness grew our care,
When the tir'd nation breath'd from civil war

Exact Racine and Corneille's noble fire
 Show'd us that France had something to admire.
 Not but the tragic spirit was our own,
 And full in Shakspeare, fair in Otway, shone ;
 But Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
 And fluent Shakspeare scarce effac'd a line.
 E'en copious Dryden wanted, or forgot,
 The last and greatest art—the art to blot.

Some doubt if equal pains or equal fire
 The humbler muse of comedy require.
 But in known images of life I guess
 The labour greater, as th' indulgence less.
 Observe how seldom e'en the best succeed :
 Tell me if Congreve's fools are fools indeed ?
 What pert low dialogue has Farquhar writ !
 How Van⁶ wants grace, who never wanted wit .
 The stage how loosely does Astrea⁷ tread,
 Who fairly puts all characters to bed !
 And idle Cibber, how he breaks the laws,
 To make poor Pinkey⁸ eat with vast applause !
 But fill their purse, our poet's work is done,
 Alike to them by pathos or by pun.

O you ! whom vanity's light bark conveys
 On fame's mad voyage by the wind of praise,
 With what a shifting gale your course you ply,
 For ever sunk too low, or borne too high.
 Who pants for glory finds but short repose ;
 A breath revives him, or a breath o'erthrows.

⁶ Sir John Vanbrugh.

⁷ Mrs. Behn.

⁸ Penkethman, the comedian.

Farewell the stage ! if just as thrives the play
The silly bard grows fat or falls away.

There still remains, to mortify a wit,
The many-headed monster of the pit ;
A senseless, worthless, and unhonour'd crowd,
Who, to disturb their betters, mighty proud,
Clattering their sticks before ten lines are spoke,
Call for the farce, the bear, or the Black-joke.
What dear delight to Britons farce affords !
Ever the taste of mobs, but now of lords :
(Taste ! that eternal wanderer, which flies
From heads to ears, and now from ears to eyes.)
The play stands still ; damn action and discourse :
Back fly the scenes, and enter foot and horse ;
Pageants on pageants, in long order drawn,
Peers, heralds, bishops, ermine, gold, and lawn ;
The champion too ! and, to complete the jest,
Old Edward's armour beams on Cibber's breast.⁹
With laughter sure Democritus had died,
Had he beheld an audience gape so wide.
Let bear or elephant be e'er so white,
The people sure, the people are the sight !
Ah, luckless poet ! stretch thy lungs and roar,
That bear or elephant shall heed thee more ;
While all its throats the gallery extends,
And all the thunder of the pit ascends !
Loud as the wolves on Orcas' stormy steep
Howl to the roarings of the northern deep,

* * The armour of one of the English kings was borrowed from the Tower, to dress the champion, when the coronation of Henry VIII. was represented on the stage.

Such is the shout, the long applauding note,
 At Quin's high plume, or Oldfield's petticoat;
 Or when from court a birthday suit bestow'd,
 Sinks the lost actor in the tawdry load.

Booth enters—hark! the universal peal!

'But has he spoken?'—Not a syllable.

'What shook the stage, and made the people
 stare?'

Cato's long wig, flower'd gown, and lacker'd chair.

Yes, lest you think I rally more than teach,
 Or praise malignly arts I cannot reach,
 Let me for once presume t' instruct the times,
 To know the poet from the man of rhymes:
 'Tis he who gives my breast a thousand pains,
 Can make me feel each passion that he feigns,
 Enrage, compose, with more than magic art,
 With pity and with terror tear my heart,
 And snatch me o'er the earth, or through the air,
 To Thebes, to Athens, when he will, and where.

But not this part of the poetic state
 Alone deserves the favour of the great.
 Think of those authors, sir, who would rely
 More on a reader's sense than gazer's eye.
 Or who shall wander where the Muses sing?
 Who climb their mountain, or who taste their spring?

How shall we fill a library with wit,
 When Merlin's cave¹ is half unfurnish'd yet?

¹ A building in the royal gardens at Richmond, where there was a small but choice collection of books.

My liege ! why writers little claim your thought
I guess, and, with their leave, will tell the fault.
We poets are (upon a poet's word)
Of all mankind the creatures most absurd :
'The season when to come, and when to go,
To sing, or cease to sing, we never know ;
And if we will recite nine hours in ten,
You lose your patience just like other men.
Then, too, we hurt ourselves when, to defend
A single verse, we quarrel with a friend ;
Repeat, unask'd ; lament, the wit's too fine
For vulgar eyes, and point out every line :
But most when straining with too weak a wing
We needs will write epistles to the king ;
And from the moment we oblige the town,
Expect a place or pension from the crown ;
Or dubb'd historians by express command,
T' enrol your triumphs o'er the seas and land,
Be call'd to court to plan some work divine,
As once for Louis, Boileau and Racine.

Yet think, great sir ! (so many virtues shown)
Ah ! think what poet best may make them known ;
Or choose at least some minister of grace,
Fit to bestow the laureate's weighty place.

Charles, to late times to be transmitted fair,
Assign'd his figure to Bernini's care ;
And great Nassau to Kneller's hand decreed
To fix him graceful on the bounding steed :
So well in paint and stone they judg'd of merit ;
But kings in wit may want discerning spirit.

The hero William, and the martyr Charles,
One knighted Blackmore, and one pension'd
Quarles,

Which made old Ben and surly Dennis swear
'No Lord's anointed, but a Russian bear.'

Not with such majesty, such bold relief,
The forms august of king, or conquering chief,
E'er swell'd on marble, as in verse have shin'd
(In polish'd verse) the manners and the mind.
O! could I mount on the Mæonian wing,
Your arms, your actions, your repose, to sing!
What seas you travers'd, and what fields you fought!
Your country's peace how oft, how dearly bought!
How barbarous rage subsided at your word,
And nations wonder'd while they dropp'd the sword!
How, when you nodded, o'er the land and deep Peace stole her wing, and wrapt the world in sleep,

Till earth's extremes your mediation own,
And Asia's tyrants tremble at your throne!
But verse, alas! your majesty disdains;
And I'm not us'd to panegyric strains.
The zeal of fools offends at any time,
But most of all the zeal of fools in rhyme.
Besides, a fate attends on all I write,
That when I aim at praise they say I bite.
A vile encomium doubly ridicules:
There's nothing blackens like the ink of fools.
If true, a woful likeness; and, if lies,
'Praise undeserv'd is scandal in disguise.'

Well may he blush who gives it, or receives ;
 And when I flatter, let my dirty leaves
 (Like journals, odes, and such forgotten things,
 As Eusden, Philips, Settle, writ of kings,)
 Clothe spice, line trunks, or, fluttering in a row,
 Befringe the rails of Bedlam and Soho.

THE SECOND EPISTLE OF THE SECOND BOOK OF HORACE.

Ludentis speciem dabit, et torquebitur. HOR.

DEAR Colonel,¹ Cobham's and your country's friend,

You love a verse ; take such as I can send.

A Frenchman comes, presents you with his boy,
 Bows and begins—'This lad, sir, is of Blois :
 Observe his shape how clean ! his locks how curl'd !
 My only son, I'd have him see the world :
 His French is pure ; his voice too—you shall hear.
 Sir, he's your slave for twenty pound a-year.
 Mere wax as yet, you fashion him with ease,
 Your barber, cook, upholsterer ; what you please :
 A perfect genius at an opera song—
 To say too much might do my honour wrong.
 Take him with all his virtues on my word ;
 His whole ambition was to serve a lord.

But, sir, to you with what would I not part?
Though, faith, I fear, 'twill break his mother's heart.
Once (and but once) I caught him in a lie,
And then, unwhipp'd, he had the grace to cry:
The fault he has I fairly shall reveal,
(Could you o'erlook but that) it is—to steal.'

If, after this, you took the graceless lad,
Could you complain, my friend, he prov'd so bad?
Faith, in such case, if you should prosecute,
I think Sir Godfrey² should decide the suit;
Who sent the thief that stole the cash away,
And punish'd him that put it in his way.

Consider then, and judge me in this light;
I told you when I went I could not write;
You said the same; and are you discontent
With laws to which you gave your own assent?
Nay, worse, to ask for verse at such a time!
D'ye think me good for nothing but to rhyme?

In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold:
Tir'd in a tedious march, one luckless night
He slept, (poor dog!) and lost it to a doit.
This put the man in such a desperate mind,
Between revenge, and grief, and hunger join'd.
Against the foe, himself, and all mankind,
He leap'd the trenches, scal'd a castle wall,
Tore down a standard, took the fort and all.
'Prodigious well!' his great commander cried,
Gave him much praise, and some reward beside.

² Sir Godfrey Kneller.

Next pleas'd His Excellence a town to batter
(Its name I know not, and 'tis no great matter);
'Go on, my friend (he cried), see yonder walls!
Advance and conquer! go where glory calls!
More honours, more rewards, attend the brave.'
Don't you remember what reply he gave? —
'D'ye think me, noble general, such a sot?
Let him take castles who has ne'er a groat.'

Bred up at home, full early I begun
To read in Greek the wrath of Peleus' son:
Besides, my father taught me from a lad
The better art, to know the good from bad
(And little sure imported to remove,
To hunt for truth in Maudlin's learned grove).
But knottier points we knew not half so well,
Depriv'd us soon of our paternal cell;
And certain laws, by sufferers thought unjust,
Denied all posts of profit or of trust.
Hopes after hopes of pious papists fail'd,
While mighty William's thundering arm prevail'd
For right hereditary tax'd and fin'd,
He stuck to poverty with peace of mind;
And me, the Muses help'd to undergo it;
Convict a papist he, and I a poet.
But (thanks to Homer) since I live and thrive,
Indebted to no prince or peer alive,
Sure I should want the care of ten Monroes,⁸
If I would scribble rather than repose.

⁸ Dr. Munroe was physician to Bedlam Hospital.

Years following years steal something every day,
At last they steal us from ourselves away ;
In one our frolics, one amusements end,
In one a mistress drops, in one a friend.
This subtle thief of life, this paltry time,
What will it leave me if it snatch my rhyme?
If every wheel of that unwearied mill,
That turn'd ten thousand verses, now stands still?

But, after all, what would ye have me do,
When out of twenty I can please not two?
When this heroics only deigns to praise,
Sharp satire that, and that Pindaric lays?
One likes the pheasant's wing, and one the leg ;
The vulgar boil, the learned roast an egg :
Hard task to hit the palate of such guests,
When Oldfield loves what Dartineuf⁴ detests !

But grant I may relapse, for want of grace,
Again to rhyme, can London be the place?
Who there his muse, or self, or soul, attends,
In crowds, and courts, law, business, feasts, and friends?

My counsel sends to execute a deed :
A poet begs me I will hear him read.
In Palace yard at nine you'll find me there—
At ten, for certain, sir, in Bloomsbury-square—
Before the lords at twelve my cause comes on—
There's a rehearsal, sir, exact at one.—
'Oh ! but a wit can study in the streets,
And raise his mind above the mob he meets.'

⁴ See note 7, p. 22, and note 2, p. 27.

Not quite so well, however, as one ought :
A hackney-coach may chance to spoil a thought ;
And then a nodding beam, or pig of lead,
God knows, may hurt the very ablest head.
Have you not seen, at Guildhall's narrow pass,
Two aldermen dispute it with an ass ?
And peers give way, exalted as they are,
E'en to their own s-r-v-ence in a car ?

Go, lofty poet, and in such a crowd
Sing thy sonorous verse—but not aloud.
Alas ! to grottos and to groves we run,
To ease and silence, every Muse's son :
Blackmore himself, for any grand effort
Would drink and doze at Tooting or Earl's-court.^t
How shall I rhyme in this eternal roar ? [before ?
How match the bards whom none e'er match'd

The man who, stretch'd in Isis' calm retreat,
To books and study gives seven years complete,
See ! strew'd with learned dust, his nightcap on,
He walks an object new beneath the sun !
The boys flock round him, and the people stare :
So stiff, so mute ; some statue you would swear
Stept from its pedestal to take the air !
And here, while town, and court, and city roars,
With mobs, and duns, and soldiers, at their doors,
Shall I, in London, act this idle part,
Composing songs for fools to get by heart ?

The Temple late two brother sergeants saw,
Who deem'd each other oracles of law ;

^t Two villages near London.

With equal talents these congenial souls,
 One lull'd th' Exchequer, and one stunn'd the Rolls;
 Each had a gravity would make you split,
 And shook his head at Murray⁶ as a wit:
 'Twas, 'Sir, your law'—and 'Sir, your eloquence,'
 'Yours, Cowper's manner'—and 'Yours, Talbot's sense.'

Thus we dispose of all poetic merit,
 Yours Milton's genius, and mine Homer's spirit.
 Call Tibbald Shakspeare, and he'll swear the Nine,
 Dear Cibber! never match'd one ode of thine.
 Lord! how we strut through Merlin's cave,⁷ to see
 No poets there but Stephen,⁸ you, and me.
 Walk with respect behind, while we at ease
 Weave laurel crowns, and take what names we please.

'My dear Tibullus! (if that will not do)
 Let me be Horace, and be Ovid you:
 Or, I'm content, allow me Dryden's strains,
 And you shall rise up Otway for your pains.'
 Much do I suffer, much, to keep in peace
 This jealous, waspish, wronghead, rhyming race;
 And much must flatter, if the whim should bite
 To court applause by printing what I write:
 But let the fit pass o'er; I'm wise enough
 To stop my ears to their confounded stuff.

In vain bad rhymers all mankind reject,
 They treat themselves with most profound respect:

⁶ Afterwards Lord Mansfield. ⁷ See note 1, p. 69.

⁸ Stephen Duck.

'Tis to small purpose that you hold your tongue,
Each, prais'd within, is happy all day long:
But how severely with themselves proceed
The men who write such verse as we can read?
Their own strict judges, not a word they spare
That wants or force, or light, or weight, or care,
Howe'er unwillingly it quits its place,
Nay, though at court (perhaps) it may find grace.
Such they'll degrade; and, sometimes in its stead,
In downright charity revive the dead;
Mark where a bold expressive phrase appears,
Bright through the rubbish of some hundred years;
Command old words, that long have slept, to wake,
Words that wise Bacon or brave Raleigh spake;
Or bid the new be English ages hence
(For use will father what's begot by sense);
Pour the full tide of eloquence along,
Serenely pure, and yet divinely strong,
Rich with the treasures of each foreign tongue;
Prune the luxuriant, the uncouth refine,
But show no mercy to an empty line;
Then polish all with so much life and ease,
You think 'tis nature, and a knack to please;
'But ease in writing flows from art, not chance,
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.'

If such the plague and pains to write by rule,
Better (say I) be pleas'd, and play the fool;
Call, if you will, bad rhyming a disease,
It gives men happiness, or leaves them ease.

There liv'd in primo Georgii (they record)
A worthy member, no small fool, a lord ;
Who, though the house was up, delighted sate,
Heard, noted, answer'd, as in full debate :
In all but this a man of sober life,
Fond of his friend, and civil to his wife ;
Not quite a madman, though a pasty fell,
And much too wise to walk into a well.
Him the damn'd doctors and his friends immur'd,
They bled, they cupp'd, they purg'd ; in short they cur'd ;

Whereat the gentleman began to stare—
'My friends ! (he cried) pox take you for your care !
That, from a patriot of distinguish'd note,
Have bled and purg'd me to a simple vote.'

Well, on the whole, plain prose must be my fate :
Wisdom (curse on it !) will come soon or late.
There is a time when poets will grow dull :
I'll e'en leave verses to the boys at school.
To rules of poetry no more confin'd,
I'll learn to smooth and harmonize my mind,
Teach every thought within its bounds to roll,
And keep the equal measure of the soul.

Soon as I enter at my country door,
My mind resumes the thread it dropt before ;
Thoughts which at Hyde-park Corner I forgot.
Meet and rejoin me in the pensive grot :
There all alone, and compliments apart,
I ask these sober questions of my heart :

If, when the more you drink the more you crave,
You tell the doctor ; when the more you have

The more you want, why not, with equal ease,
Confess as well your folly as disease?

The heart resolves this matter in a trice,
'Men only feel the smart, but not the vice.'

When golden angels cease to cure the evil,
You give all royal witchcraft to the devil:
When servile chaplains¹ cry, that birth and place
Endue a peer with honour, truth, and grace,
Look in that breast, most dirty D—! be fair,
Say, can you find out one such lodger there?
Yet still, not heeding what your heart can teach,
You go to church to hear these flatterers preach.

Indeed, could wealth bestow or wit or merit,
A grain of courage, or a spark of spirit,
The wisest man might blush, I must agree,
If D— lov'd sixpence more than he.

If there be truth in law, and use can give
A property, that's yours on which you live.
Delightful Abs-court,² if its fields afford
Their fruits to you, confesses you its lord:
All Worldly's hens, nay, partridge, sold to town,
His venison too, a guinea makes your own:
He bought at thousands what with better wit
You purchase as you want, and bit by bit:
Now, or long since, what difference will be found!
You pay a penny, and he paid a pound.

Heathcote himself, and such large-acred men,
Lords of fat E'sham, or of Lincoln Fen,

¹ An allusion to a dedication by Dr. Kennet to the Duke of Devonshire, to whom he was chaplain.

² A farm over against Hampton Court.

Buy every stick of wood that lends them heat,
 Buy every pullet they afford to eat :
 Yet these are wights who fondly call their own
 Half that the devil o'erlooks from Lincoln town.
 The laws of God, as well as of the land,
 Abhor a perpetuity should stand :
 Estates have wings, and hang in fortune's power,
 Loose on the point of every wavering hour,
 Ready by force, or of your own accord,
 By sale, at least by death, to change their lord.
 Man? and for ever? wretch! what wouldst thou have?

Heir urges heir, like wave impelling wave.
 All vast possessions, (just the same the case
 Whether you call them villa, park, or chase)
 Alas, my Bathurst! what will they avail?
 Join Cotswood hills to Saperton's fair dale;
 Let rising granaries and temples here,
 There mingled farms and pyramids, appear;
 Link towns to towns with avenues of oak,
 Enclose whole downs in walls; 'tis all a joke!
 Inexorable death shall level all,
 And trees, and stones, and farms, and farmer fall.

Gold, silver, ivory, vases sculptur'd high,
 Paint, marble, gems, and robes of Persian dye,
 There are who have not—and, thank Heaven,
 there are

Who, if they have not, think not worth their care.

Talk what you will of taste, my friend, you'll find
 Two of a face as soon as of a mind.

Why, of two brothers, rich and restless one
 Ploughs, burns, manures, and toils from sun to sun;
 The other slights, for women, sports, and wines,
 All Townshend's turnips,³ and all Grosvenor's mines:

Why one, like Bu—,⁴ with pay and scorn content,
 Bows and votes on in court and parliament;
 One, driven by strong benevolence of soul,
 Shall fly, like Oglethorpe,⁵ from pole to pole;
 Is known alone to that directing Power
 Who forms the genius in the natal hour;
 That God of Nature, who, within us still,
 Inclines our action, not constrains our will:
 Various of temper, as of face or frame,
 Each individual: His great end the same.

Yes, sir, how small soever be my heap,
 A part I will enjoy as well as keep.
 My heir may sigh, and think it want of grace
 A man so poor would live without a place;
 But sure no statute in his favour says,
 How free or frugal I shall pass my days;
 I who at sometimes spend, at others spare,
 Divided between carelessness and care.
 'Tis one thing, madly to disperse my store;
 Another, not to heed to treasure more;

³ Lord Townshend, Secretary to George the First and Second, on retiring from public life, amused himself with agriculture: he was fond of talking about his turnips.

⁴ Bubb Dodington, afterwards Lord Melcombe.

⁵ General Oglethorpe, distinguished for his settlement of the colony in Georgia, and his military exploits.

Glad, like a boy, to snatch the first good day,
And pleas'd, if sordid want be far away.

What is't to me (a passenger, God wot,)
Whether my vessel be first-rate or not?
'The ship itself may make a better figure,
But I that sail, am neither less nor bigger.
I neither strut with every favouring breath,
Nor strive with all the tempest in my teeth;
In power, wit, figure, virtue, fortune, plac'd
Behind the foremost, and before the last.

'But why all this of avarice? I have none.'
I wish you joy, sir, of a tyrant gone:
But does no other lord it at this hour,
As wild and mad? the avarice of power?
Does neither rage inflame nor fear appall?
Not the black fear of death, that saddens all?
With terrors round, can reason hold her throne,
Despise the known, nor tremble at th' unknown?
Survey both worlds, intrepid and entire,
In spite of witches, devils, dreams, and fire?
Pleas'd to look forward, pleas'd to look behind,
And count each birthday with a grateful mind?
Has life no sourness, drawn so near its end?
Canst thou endure a foe, forgive a friend?
Has age but melted the rough parts away,
As winter fruits grow mild ere they decay?
Or will you think, my friend! your business done,
When of a hundred thorns you pull out one?

Learn to live well, or fairly make your will;
You've play'd and lov'd, and ate and drank, your fill.

Walk sober off, before a sprightlier age
Comes tittering on, and shoves you from the stage :
Leave such to trifle with more grace and ease,
Whom folly pleases, and whose follies please.

THE FIRST ODE OF THE FOURTH BOOK
OF HORACE.

TO VENUS.

AGAIN? new tumults in my breast?
Ah, spare me, Venus! let me, let me rest!
I am not now, alas! the man
As in the gentle reign of my queen Anne.
Ah! sound no more thy soft alarms,
Nor circle sober fifty with thy charms.
Mother too fierce of dear desires!
Turn, turn to willing hearts your wanton fires:
To number five direct your doves,
There spread round Murray¹ all your blooming loves;
Noble and young, who strikes the heart
With every sprightly, every decent^r part;
Equal the injur'd to defend,
To charm the mistress, or to fix the friend.
He, with a hundred arts refin'd,
Shall stretch thy conquests over half the kind:
To him each rival shall submit,
Make but his riches equal to his wit.

Then shall they form the marble grace,
(Thy Grecian form) and Chloe lend the face:
His house, embosom'd in the grove,
Sacred to social life and social love,
Shall glitter o'er the pendant green,
Where Thames reflects the visionary scene:
Thither the silver sounding lyres
Shall call the smiling loves and young desires;
There every grace and muse shall throng,
Exalt the dance, or animate the song;
There youths and nymphs, in consort gay,
Shall hail the rising, close the parting day.
With me, alas! those joys are o'er;
For me the vernal garlands bloom no more.
Adieu! fond hope of mutual fire,
The still believing, still renew'd desire:
Adieu! the heart-expanding bowl,
And all the kind deceivers of the soul!
But why? ah! tell me, ah! too dear,
Steals down my cheek th' involuntary tear?
Why words so flowing, thoughts so free,
Stop, or turn nonsense, at one glance of thee?
Thee, dress'd in fancy's airy beam,
Absent I follow through th' extended dream;
Now, now I seize, I clasp thy charms,
And now you burst (ah, cruel!) from my arms,
And swiftly shoot along the mall,
Or softly glide by the canal;
Now shown by Cynthia's silver ray,
And now on rolling waters snatch'd away.

THE NINTH ODE OF THE FOURTH BOOK OF HORACE.

A FRAGMENT.

LEST you should think that verse shall die
Which sounds the silver Thames along,
Taught on the wings of truth to fly
Above the reach of vulgar song ;

Though daring Milton sits sublime,
In Spenser native muses play ;
Nor yet shall Waller yield to time,
Nor pensive Cowley's moral lay—

Sages and chiefs long since had birth
Ere Cæsar was or Newton nam'd ;
These rais'd new empires o'er the earth,
And those new heavens and systems fram'd.

Vain was the chief's, the sage's pride !
They had no poet, and they died.
In vain they schem'd, in vain they bled !
They had no poet, and are dead.

HOB.

SATIRE II.

YES, thank my stars! as early as I knew
This town, I had the sense to hate it too;
Yet here, as e'en in hell, there must be still
One giant vice, so excellently ill,
That all beside one pities, not abhors;
As who knows Sappho, smiles at other whores.

I grant that poetry's a crying sin;
It brought (no doubt) th' excise and army in:
Catch'd like the plague, or love, the Lord knows how,

But that the cure is starving, all allow.
Yet like the papist's is the poet's state,
Poor and disarm'd, and hardly worth your hate!

Here a lean bard, whose wit could never give Himself a dinner, makes an actor live:
The thief condemn'd, in law already dead,
So prompts and saves a rogue who cannot read.
Thus as the pipes of some carv'd organ move,
The gilded puppets dance and mount above,

Heav'd by the breath th' inspiring bellows blow
Th' inspiring bellows lie and pant below.

One sings the fair ; but songs no longer move ;
No rat is rhym'd to death, nor maid to love :
In love's, in nature's spite the siege they hold,
And scorn the flesh, the devil, and all but gold.

These write to lords, some mean reward to get,
As needy beggars sing at doors for meat :
Those write because all write, and so have still
Excuse for writing, and for writing ill.

Wretched, indeed ! but far more wretched yet
Is he who makes his meal on others' wit :
'Tis chang'd, no doubt, from what it was before ;
His rank digestion makes it wit no more :
Sense pass'd through him no longer is the same ;
For food digested takes another name.

I pass o'er all those confessors and martyrs,
Who live like S—tt—n, or who die like Chartres.
Out-cant old Esdras, or out-drink his heir,
Out-usure Jews, or Irishmen out-swear ;
Wicked as pages, who in early years
Act sins which Prisca's confessor scarce hears.
E'en those I pardon, for whose sinful sake
Schoolmen new tenements in hell must make ;
Of whose strange crimes no canonist can tell
In what commandment's large contents they dwell.

One, one man only breeds my just offence,
Whom crimes gave wealth, and wealth gave im-
 pudence :

Time, that at last matures a clap to pox,
Whose gentle progress makes a calf an ox,
And brings all natural events to pass,
Hath made him an attorney of an ass.
No young divine, new benefic'd, can be
More pert, more proud, more positive than he.
What further could I wish the fop to do,
But turn a wit, and scribble verses too?
Pierce the soft labyrinth of a lady's ear
With rhymes of this per cent. and that per year;
Or court a wife, spread out his wily parts,
Like nets, or lime twigs, for rich widows' hearts;
Call himself barrister to every wench,
And woo in language of the Pleas and Bench;
Language which Boreas might to Auster hold,
More rough than forty Germans when they scold.

Curs'd be the wretch, so venal and so vain,
Paltry and proud as drabs in Drury lane.
'Tis such a bounty as was never known,
If Peter¹ designs to help you to your own.
What thanks, what praise, if Peter but supplies!
And what a solemn face if he denies!
Grave, as when prisoners shake the head, and swear
'Twas only suretyship that brought them there.
His office keeps your parchment fates entire,
He starves with cold to save them from the fire;
For you he walks the streets through rain or dust,
For not in chariots Peter puts his trust;

For you he sweats and labours at the laws,
Takes God to witness he affects your cause,
And lies to every lord in every thing,
Like a king's favourite—or like a king.
These are the talents that adorn them all,
From wicked Waters² e'en to godly **.
Not more of simony beneath black gowns,
Nor more of bastardy in heirs to crowns.
In shillings and in pence at first they deal,
And steal so little, few perceive they steal ;
Till like the sea, they compass all the land,
From Scots to Wight, from Mount to Dover strand ;
And when rank widows purchase luscious nights,
Or when a duke to Jansen punts at White's,
Or city heir in mortgage melts away,
Satan himself feels far less joy than they.
Piecemeal they win this acre first, then that,
Glean on, and gather up the whole estate ;
Then strongly fencing ill-got wealth by law,
Indentures, covenants, articles, they draw,
Large as the fields themselves, and larger far
Than civil codes, with all their glosses, are ;
So vast, our new divines, we must confess,
Are fathers of the church for writing less.
But let them write ; for you each rogue impairs
The deeds, and dexterously omits ses heires :
No commentator can more slily pass
O'er a learn'd unintelligible place ;

² See note ¹, vol. ii. p. 117.

Or in quotation shrewd divines leave out
Those words that would against them clear the doubt.

So Luther thought the Paternoster long,
When doom'd to say his beads and evensong ;
But having cast his cowl, and left those laws,
Adds to Christ's prayer, the Power and Glory clause.

The lands are bought ; but where are to be found
Those ancient woods that shaded all the ground ?
We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire.
Where are those troops of poor, that throng'd of yore
The good old landlord's hospitable door ?
Well, I could wish that still, in lordly domes,
Some beasts were kill'd, though not whole hecatombs ;

That both extremes were banish'd from their walls,
Carthusian fasts and fulsome bacchanals ;
And all mankind might that just mean observe,
In which none e'er could surfeit, none could starve.
These are good works, 'tis true, we all allow,
But, oh ! these works are not in fashion now :
Like rich old wardrobes, things extremely rare,
Extremely fine, but what no man will wear.

Thus much I've said, I trust without offence ;
Let no court sycophant pervert my sense,
Nor sly informer watch, these words to draw
Within the reach of treason or the law.

SATIRE IV.

WELL, if it be my time to quit the stage,
Adieu to all the follies of the age !
I die in charity with fool and knave,
Secure of peace at least beyond the grave.
I've had my purgatory here betimes,
And paid for all my satires, all my rhymes.
The poet's hell, its tortures, fiends, and flames,
To this were trifles, toys, and empty names.

With foolish pride my heart was never fir'd,
Nor the vain itch t' admire or be admir'd :
I hop'd for no commission from his grace ;
I bought no benefice, I begg'd no place ;
Had no new verses nor new suit to show,
Yet went to court !—the devil would have it so.
But as the fool that in reforming days
Would go to mass in jest (as story says)
Could not but think to pay his fine was odd,
Since 'twas no form'd design of serving God ;
So was I punish'd, as if full as proud
As prone to ill, as negligent of good,
As deep in debt, without a thought to pay,
As vain, as idle, and as false as they
Who live at court, for going once that way !
Scarce was I enter'd, when, behold ! there came
A thing which Adam had been pos'd to name ;

Noah had refus'd it lodging in his ark,
 Where all the race of reptiles might embark;
 A verier monster than on Afric's shore
 The sun e'er got, or slimy Nilus bore, [tain,
 Or Sloane or Woodward's wondrous shelves con-
 Nay, all that lying travellers can feign.
 The watch would hardly let him pass at noon,
 At night would swear him dropp'd out of the moon:
 One whom the mob, when next we find or make
 A popish plot, shall for a Jesuit take,
 And the wise justice, starting from his chair,
 Cry, 'by your priesthood, tell me what you are!'
 Such was the wight: th' apparel on his back,
 Though coarse, was reverend, and though bare, was black.

The suit, if by the fashion one might guess,
 Was velvet in the youth of good queen Bess,
 But mere tuff-taffety what now remain'd:
 So time, that changes all things, had ordain'd!
 Our sons shall see it leisurely decay,
 First turn plain rash, then vanish quite away.

This thing has travell'd, speaks each language
 And knows what's fit for every state to do; [too,
 Of whose best phrase and courtly accent join'd
 He forms one tongue, exotic and refin'd.
 Talkers I've learn'd to bear; Motteux¹ I knew,
 Henley² himself I've heard, and Budgell³ too,

¹ See Dunciad, B. ii. v. 412.

² See note 6, p. 5.

³ See note on Dunciad, B. ii. v. 397.

The doctor's wormwood style, the hash of tongues
 A pedant makes, the storm of Gonson's lungs,⁴
 The whole artillery of the terms of war,
 And (all those plagues in one) the bawling bar
 These I could bear; but not a rogue so civil Whose tongue will compliment you to the devil:
 A tongue that can cheat widows, cancel scores,
 Make Scots speak treason, cozen subtlest whores,
 With royal favourites in flattery vie,
 And Oldmixon and Burnet both outlie.

He spies me out; I whisper, gracious God!
 What sin of mine could merit such a rod,
 That all the shot of dulness now must be
 From this thy blunderbuss discharg'd on me!
 Permit, he cries, no stranger to your fame,
 To crave your sentiment, if * * * 's your name.
 What speech esteem you most? 'The king's,' said I.
 But the best words?—'O, sir, the dictionary.'
 You miss my aim; I mean the most acute,
 And perfect speaker?—'Onslow, past dispute.'
 But, sir, of writers?—'Swift, for closer style,
 But Hoadly for a period of a mile.'
 Why, yes, 'tis granted, these indeed may pass;
 Good common linguists, and so Panurge was;
 Nay, troth, th' Apostles (though perhaps too rough)
 Had once a pretty gift of tongues enough:
 Yet these were all poor gentlemen! I dare
 Affirm 'twas travel made them what they were.

Thus others' talents having nicely shown,
 He came by sure transition to his own;

⁴ Sir John Gonson, a police magistrate.

Till I cried out, 'You prove yourself so able,
Pity you was not druggerman at Babel;
For had they found a linguist half so good,
I make no question but the tower had stood.'

'Obliging sir! for courts you sure were made,
Why then for ever buried in the shade?
Spirits like you should see and should be seen;
The king would smile on you—at least the queen.
'Ah, gentle sir! you courtiers so cajole us—
But Tully has it Nunquam minus solus:
And as for courts, forgive me if I say
No lessons now are taught the Spartan way.
Though in his pictures lust be full display'd,
Few are the converts Aretine has made;
And though the court show vice exceeding clear,
None should, by my advice, learn virtue there.'

At this entranc'd, he lifts his hands and eyes,
Squeaks like a high-stretch'd lute-string, and replies
'Oh! 'tis the sweetest of all earthly things
To gaze on princes, and to talk of kings!'
'Then, happy man who shows the tombs! (said I)
He dwells amidst the royal family;
He every day from king to king can walk,
Of all our Harries, all our Edwards talk,
And get, by speaking truth of monarchs dead,
What few can of the living, ease and bread.'—
'Lord, sir, a mere mechanic! strangely low,
And coarse of phrase—your English all are so.
How elegant your Frenchmen!'—'Mine, d'ye
mean?

I have but one; I hope the fellow's clean.

'O sir, politely so! nay, let me die,
Your only wearing is your paduasoy.'
'Not, sir, my only; I have better still,
And this you see is but my dishabille.'—
Wild to get loose, his patience I provoke,
Mistake, confound, object at all he spoke:
But as coarse iron, sharpen'd, mangles more,
And itch most hurts when anger'd to a sore,
So when you plague a fool, 'tis still the curse,
You only make the matter worse and worse.

He past it o'er; affects an easy smile
At all my peevishness, and turns his style.
He asks, 'What news?' I tell him of new plays,
New eunuchs, harlequins, and operas.
He hears, and as a still, with simples in it,
Between each drop it gives stays half a minute,
Loath to enrich me with too quick replies,
By little and by little drops his lies.
Mere household trash! of birthnights, balls, and shows,
More than ten Holinsheds, or Halls, or Stows.
When the queen frown'd or smil'd he knows, and what

A subtle minister may make of that:
Who sins, with whom: who got his pension rug,
Or quicken'd a reversion by a drug:
Whose place is quarter'd out three parts in four,
And whether to a bishop or a whore:
Who having lost his credit, pawn'd his rent,
Is therefore fit to have a government:

Who, in the secret, deals in stocks secure,
And cheats th' unknowing widow and the poor :
Who makes a trust of charity a job,
And gets an act of parliament to rob :
Why turnpikes rise, and how no cit nor clown
Can gratis see the country or the town :
Shortly no lad shall chuck, or lady vole,
But some excising courtier will have toll :
He tells what strumpet places sells for life,
What 'squire his lands, what citizen his wife :
And last (which proves him wiser still than all)
What lady's face is not a whited wall.

As one of Woodward's patients,⁵ sick, and sore,
I puke, I nauseate—yet he thrusts in more ;
Trims Europe's balance, tops the statesman's part,
And talks gazettes and postboys o'er by heart.
Like a big wife at sight of loathsome meat
Ready to cast, I yawn, I sigh, and sweat.
Then as a licens'd spy, whom nothing can
Silence or hurt, he libels the great man ;
Swears every place entail'd for years to come,
In sure succession to the day of doom.
He names the price for every office paid,
And says our wars thrive ill because delay'd .
Nay, hints 'tis by connivance of the court
That Spain robs on, and Dunkirk's still a port.
Not more amazement seiz'd on Circe's guests
To see themselves fall endlong into beasts,

⁵ An allusion to the effects of his use of oils in bilious complaints.

Than mine, to find a subject staid and wise
Already half-turn'd traitor by surprise.
I felt th' infection slide from him to me,
As in the pox some give it to get free ;
And quick to swallow me, methought I saw
One of our giant statues ope its jaw.

In that nice moment, as another lie
Stood just a-tilt, the minister came by.
To him he flies, and bows, and bows again,
Then, close as Umbra, joins the dirty train.
Not Fannius' self more impudently near,
When half his nose is in his prince's ear.
I quak'd at heart ; and, still afraid to see
All the court fill'd with stranger things than he,
Ran out as fast as one that pays his bail
And dreads more actions, hurries from a jail.

Bear me, some god ! Oh quickly bear me hence
To wholesome solitude, the nurse of sense,
Where contemplation prunes her ruffled wings,
And the free soul looks down to pity kings !
There sober thought pursued th' amusing theme,
Till fancy colour'd it, and form'd a dream :
A vision hermits can to hell transport,
And forc'd e'en me to see the damn'd at court.
Not Dante, dreaming all th' infernal state,
Beheld such scenes of envy, sin, and hate.
Base fear becomes the guilty, not the free,
Suits tyrants, plunderers, but suits not me :
Shall I, the terror of this sinful town,
Care if a liveried lord or smile or frown ?

Who cannot flatter, and detest who can,
 Tremble before a noble serving man?
 O my fair mistress, Truth! shall I quit thee
 For huffing, braggart, puffed nobility?
 Thou who, since yesterday, hast roll'd o'er all
 The busy idle blockheads of the ball,
 Hast thou, O sun! beheld an emptier sort
 Than such as swell this bladder of a court?
 Now pox on those who show a court in wax!⁶
 It ought to bring all courtiers on their backs;
 Such painted puppets! such a varnish'd race
 Of hollow gewgaws, only dress and face!
 Such waxen noses, stately staring things—
 No wonder some folks bow, and think them kings.

See! where the British youth, engag'd no more
 At Fig's, at White's,⁷ with felons, or a whore,
 Pay their last duty to the court, and come
 All fresh and fragrant to the drawing room;
 In hues as gay, and odours as divine,
 As the fair fields they sold to look so fine.
 'That's velvet for a king!' the flatterer swears;
 'Tis true, for ten days hence 'twill be King Lear's.
 Our court may justly to our stage give rules,
 That helps it both to fools' coats and to fools.
 And why not players strut in courtiers' clothes?
 For these are actors too as well as those.

⁶ A show of the Court of France in wax-work.

⁷ Fig's was a prize-fighter's academy, White's, a gaming-house.

Wants reach all states; they beg but better drest,
And all is splendid poverty at best.

Painted for sight, and essenc'd for the smell,
Like frigates fraught with spice and cochineal,
Sail in the ladies: how each pirate eyes
So weak a vessel and so rich a prize!
Top-gallant he, and she in all her trim:
He boarding her, she striking sail to him.
'Dear countess! you have charms all hearts to hit!'
And, 'Sweet Sir Fopling! you have so much wit!'
Such wits and beauties are not prais'd for nought,
For both the beauty and the wit are bought.
'Twould burst e'en Heraclitus with the spleen
To see those anties, Fopling and Courtin:
The presence seems, with things so richly odd,
The mosque of Mahound, or some queer pagod.
See them survey their limbs by Durer's rules,
Of all beau-kind the best proportion'd fools!
Adjust their clothes, and to confession draw
Those venial sins, an atom, or a straw:
But oh! what terrors must distract the soul
Convicted of that mortal crime, a hole;
Or should one pound of powder less bespread
Those monkey tails that wag behind their head!
Thus finish'd, and corrected to a hair,
They march, to prate their hour before the fair.
So first to preach a white-glov'd chaplain goes,
With band of lily, and with cheek of rose,
Sweeter than Sharon, in immaculate trim,
Neatness itself impertinent in him.

Let but the ladies smile, and they are blest :
Prodigious ! how the things protest, protest.
Peace, fools ! or Gonson ⁸ will for papists seize you,
If once he catch you at your Jesu ! Jesu !

Nature made every fop to plague his brother,
Just as one beauty mortifies another.
But here's the captain that will plague them both ;
Whose air cries, arm ! whose very look's an oath.
The captain's honest, sirs, and that's enough,
Though his soul's bullet, and his body buff.
He spits foreright ; his haughty chest before,
Like battering rams, beats open every door ;
And with a face as red, and as awry,
As Herod's hang-dogs in old tapestry,
Scarecrow to boys, the breeding woman's curse,
Has yet a strange ambition to look worse ;
Confounds the civil, keeps the rude in awe,
Jests like a licens'd fool, commands like law.

Frighted, I quit the room, but leave it so
As men from jails to execution go ;
For hung with deadly sins I see the wall,
And lin'd with giants deadlier than them all .
Each man an Askapart, of strength to toss,
For quoits, both Temple-bar and Charing-cross.
Scar'd at the grisly forms, I sweat, I fly,
And shake all o'er, like a discover'd spy.

Courts are too much for wits so weak as mine ;
Charge them with heaven's artillery, bold divine !

⁸ See note ⁴, p. 94.

From such alone the great rebukes endure,
 Whose satire's sacred, and whose rage secure :
 'Tis mine to wash a few light stains, but theirs
 To deluge sin, and drown a court in tears.
 Howe'er, what's now apocrypha, my wit,
 In time to come, may pass for holy writ.

EPILOGUE TO THE SATIRES.

IN TWO DIALOGUES. WRITTEN IN 1738.

DIALOGUE I

Fr. Not twice a twelvemonth you appear in print,
 And when it comes, the court see nothing in't :
 You grow correct, that once with rapture writ,
 And are, besides, too moral for a wit.
 Decay of parts, alas ! we all must feel—
 Why now, this moment, don't I see you steal ?
 'Tis all from Horace ; Horace long before ye
 Said ' Tories call'd him whig, and whigs a tory ;'
 And taught his Romans, in much better metre,
 ' To laugh at fools who put their trust in Peter.'

But Horace, sir, was delicate, was nice ;
 Bubo¹ observes, he lash'd no sort of vice :
 Horace would say, Sir Billy² serv'd the crown,

² Sir William Young, who was frequently employed to make long speeches in the House till the minister's friends were gathered together.

Blunt³ could do business, Higgins⁴ knew the town ;
 In Sappho touch the failings of the sex,
 In reverend bishops note some small neglects,
 And own the Spaniard did a waggish thing,⁵
 Who cropt our ears, and sent them to the king.
 His sly, polite, insinuating style
 Could please at court, and make Augustus smile :
 An artful manager, that crept between
 His friend and shame, and was a kind of screen.
 But, 'faith, your very friends will soon be sore ;
 Patriots there are who wish you'd jest no more.
 And where's the glory ? 'twill be only thought
 The great man never offer'd you a groat.
 Go see Sir Robert⁶—

P. See Sir Robert !—hum—
 And never laugh—for all my life to come ;
 Seen him I have ; but in his happier hour
 Of social pleasure, ill exchang'd for power ;
 Seen him, uncumber'd with a venal tribe,
 Smile without art, and win without a bribe.
 Would he oblige me ? let me only find
 He does not think me what he thinks mankind.
 Come, come, at all I laugh he laughs, no doubt ;
 The only difference is—I dare laugh out.

³ See note⁴, vol. ii. p. 122.

⁴ Gaoler of the Fleet prison, enriched himself by exactions, for which he was tried and dismissed from his office.

⁵ The captain of a Spanish ship is said to have cut off the ears of the captain of an English ship, named Jenkins, bidding him carry them home to the king his master.

⁶ Sir Robert Walpole.

Fr. Why, yes: with scripture still you may be free;

A horselaugh, if you please, at honesty;
A joke on Jekyl,⁷ or some odd old Whig,
Who never chang'd his principle or wig.
A patriot is a fool in every age,
Whom all lord chamberlains allow the stage:
These nothing hurts; they keep their fashion still,
And wear their strange old virtue as they will.

If any ask you, 'Who's the man so near
His prince, that writes in verse, and has his ear?'
Why, answer, Lyttelton! and I'll engage
The worthy youth shall ne'er be in a rage;
But were his verses vile, his whisper base,
You'd quickly find him in Lord Fanny's case.
Sejanus, Wolsey, hurt not honest Fleury,
But well may put some statesmen in a fury.

Laugh then at any but at fools or foes;
These you but anger, and you mend not those.
Laugh at your friends, and if your friends are sore,
So much the better, you may laugh the more.
To vice and folly to confine the jest
Sets half the world, God knows, against the rest,
Did not the sneer of more impartial men
At sense and virtue balance all again. .
Judicious wits spread wide the ridicule,
And charitably comfort knave and fool.

⁷ Sir Joseph Jekyl, Master of the Rolls, a true whig, and a man of perfect probity: he sometimes voted against the court.

P. Dear sir, forgive the prejudice of youth:
 Adieu distinction, satire, warmth, and truth!
 Come, harmless characters that no one hit;
 Come, Henley's oratory, Osborne's wit!⁸
 The honey dropping from Favonio's tongue,
 The flowers of Bubo, and the flow of Young!⁹
 The gracious dew of pulpit eloquence,
 And all the well-whipt cream of courtly sense;
 The first was Hvy's, F's next, and then
 The Ste's, and then Hvy's once again.
 O come! that easy Ciceronian style,
 So Latin, yet so English all the while,
 As, though the pride of Middleton and Bland,¹
 All boys may read, and girls may understand!
 Then might I sing without the least offence,
 And all I sung should be the nation's sense;
 Or teach the melancholy muse to mourn,
 Hang the sad verse on Carolina's urn,
 And hail her passage to the realms of rest,
 All parts perform'd, and all her children blest!²
 So—Satire is no more—I feel it die—
 No gazetteer more innocent than I—
 And let, a God's name! every fool and knave
 Be grac'd through life, and flatter'd in his grave.

7 F. Why so? if satire knows its time and place,

⁸ See note 6, p. 5, and note on Dunciad, B. ii. v. 312.

⁹ See notes 1 and 2, p. 102.

² See Memoir prefixed to these volumes, p. cxiii.

You still may lash the greatest—in disgrace;
 For merit will by turns forsake them all;
 Would you know when? exactly when they fall.
 But let all satire in all changes spare
 Immortal Sk,³ and grave Dere.
 Silent and soft, as saints remove to Heaven,
 All ties dissolv'd, and every sin forgiven,
 These may some gentle ministerial wing
 Receive, and place for ever near a king!
 There where no passion, pride, or shame transport,
 Lull'd with the sweet repentance of a court:
 There where no father's, brother's, friend's disgrace
 Once break their rest, or stir them from their place;
 But past the sense of human miseries,
 All tears are wip'd for ever from all eyes;
 No cheek is known to blush, no heart to throb,
 Save when they lose a question or a job.

P. Good heaven forbid that I should blast their glory,

Who know how like whig ministers to tory,
 And when three sovereigns died could scarce be vexed,

Considering what a gracious prince was next.
 Have I, in silent wonder, seen such things
 As pride in slaves, and avarice in kings?
 And at a peer or peeress shall I fret,
 Who starves a sister or forswears a debt?
 Virtue, I grant you, is an empty boast;
 But shall the dignity of vice be lost?

³ Selkirk.

Ye gods ! shall Cibber's son,⁴ without rebuke,
 Swear like a lord ; or Rich⁵ outwhore a duke ?
 A favourite's porter with his master vie,
 Be brib'd as often, and as often lie ?
 Shall Ward draw contracts with a statesman's skill ?
 Or Japhet pocket, like His Grace, a will ?
 Is it for Bond⁶ or Peter⁷ (paltry things)
 To pay their debts, or keep their faith, like kings ?
 If Blount⁸ dispatch'd himself, he play'd the man,
 And so mayst thou, illustrious Passeran !⁹
 But shall a printer,¹ weary of his life,
 Learn from their books to hang himself and wife ?
 This, this, my friend, I cannot, must not bear ;
 Vice thus abus'd demands a nation's care ;
 This calls the church to deprecate our sin,
 And hurls the thunder of the laws on gin.

Outdo Landaff in doctrine—yea, in life;
Let humble Allen,⁴ with an awkward shame,
Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame.
Virtue may choose the high or low degree,
'Tis just alike to virtue and to me;
Dwell in a monk, or light upon a king,
She's still the same belov'd, contented thing.
Vice is undone, if she forgets her birth,
And stoops from angels to the dregs of earth;
But 'tis the fall degrades her to a whore;
Let greatness own her, and she's mean no more:
Her birth, her beauty, crowds and courts confess,
Chaste matrons praise her, and grave bishops bless;
In golden chains the willing world she draws,
And hers the gospel is, and hers the laws;
Mounts the tribunal, lifts her scarlet head,
And sees pale virtue carted in her stead.
Lo! at the wheels of her triumphal car,
Old England's genius, rough with many a scar,
Dragg'd in the dust! his arms hang idly round,
His flag inverted trails along the ground!
Our youth, all liveried o'er with foreign gold,
Before her dance! behind her crawl the old!
See thronging millions to the pagod run,
And offer country, parent, wife, or son!
Hear her black trumpet through the land proclaim,
That not to be corrupted is the shame.
In soldier, churchman, patriot, man in power,
'Tis avarice all, ambition is no more!

⁴ See Memoir prefixed to these volumes, p. cxi.

See all our nobles begging to be slaves!
 See all our fools aspiring to be knaves!
 The wit of cheats, the courage of a whore,
 Are what ten thousand envy and adore:
 All, all look up with reverential awe,
 At crimes that 'scape, or triumph o'er the law:
 While truth, worth, wisdom, daily they decry—
 'Nothing is sacred now but villany.'

Yet may this verse (if such a verse remain)
 Show there was one who held it in disdain.

DIALOGUE II.

Fr. 'Tis all a libel—Paxton,¹ sir, will say.

P. Not yet, my friend! to-morrow 'faith it may:
 And for that very cause I print to-day.
 How should I fret to mangle every line
 In reverence to the sins of Thirty-nine!
 Vice with such giant strides comes on amain,
 Invention strives to be before in vain;
 Feign what I will, and paint it e'er so strong,
 Some rising genius sins up to my song.

F. Yet none but you by name the guilty lash;
 E'en Guthry² saves half Newgate by a dash.
 Spare then the person, and expose the vice.

P. How, sir! not damn the sharper, but the dice?

² Ordinary of Newgate, who published memoirs of the malefactors, and often, out of regard to their reputation, set down only the initial letters of their names.

Come on then, satire! general, unconfin'd,
Spread thy broad wing, and souse on all the kind
Ye statesmen, priests, of one religion all!
Ye tradesmen, vile, in army, court, or hall!
Ye reverend atheists! F. Scandal! name them, who?

P. Why that's the thing you bid me not to do.
Who starv'd a sister, who forswore a debt,
I never nam'd; the town's inquiring yet.
The poisoning dame—F. You mean—P. I don't.
F. You do.

P. See, now I keep the secret, and not you!
The bribing statesman—F. Hold, too high you go.

P. The brib'd elector—F. There you stoop too low.

P. I fain would please you, if I knew with what.
Tell me, which knave is lawful game, which not?
Must great offenders, once escap'd the crown,
Like royal harts, be never more run down?
Admit your law to spare the knight requires,
As beasts of nature may we hunt the squires?
Suppose I censure—you know what I mean—
To save a bishop, may I name a dean?

F. A dean, sir? no: his fortune is not made;
You hurt a man that's rising in the trade.

P. If not the tradesman who set up to-day,
Much less the 'prentice who to-morrow may.
Down, down, proud satire! tho' a realm be spoil'd.
Arraign no mightier thief than wretched Wild;⁸

⁸ Jonathan Wild.

Or, if a court or country's made a job,
Go drench a pickpocket, and join the mob.

But, sir, I beg you—for the love of vice—
The matter's weighty, pray consider twice—
Have you less pity for the needy cheat,
The poor and friendless villain, than the great?
Alas! the small discredit of a bribe
Scarce hurts the lawyer, but undoes the scribe.
Then better sure it charity becomes
To tax directors, who (thank God!) have plums;
Still better ministers, or if the thing
May pinch e'en there—why, lay it on a king.

F. Stop! stop!

P. Must satire then nor rise nor fall?
Speak out, and bid me blame no rogues at all.

F. Yes, strike that Wild, I'll justify the blow.

P. Strike? why the man was hang'd ten years ago:

Who now that obsolete example fears?
E'en Peter⁴ trembles only for his ears.

F. What, always Peter? Peter thinks you mad;
You make men desperate, if they once are bad;
Else might he take to virtue some years hence—

P. As S * * k, if he lives, will love the prince.

F. Strange spleen to S * * k!

P. Do I wrong the man?

God knows I praise a courtier where I can.
When I confess there is who feels for fame,
And melts to goodness, need I Scarborough name?

⁴ The year before this was written, Peter had narrowly escaped the pillory for forgery. See note 2, vol. ii. p. 121.

Pleas'd let me own, in Esher's peaceful grove,
(Where Kent and Nature vie for Pelham's love)
The scene, the master, opening to my view,
I sit and dream I see my Craggs anew!

E'en in a bishop I can spy desert;
Secker is decent, Rundel has a heart;
Manners with candour are to Benson given;
To Berkeley every virtue under heaven.

But does the court a worthy man remove?
That instant, I declare, he has my love:
I shun his zenith, court his mild decline.
Thus Somers once and Halifax were mine:
Of in the clear still mirror of retreat
I studied Shrewsbury, the wise and great:
Carleton's calm sense and Stanhope's noble flame
Compar'd, and knew their generous end the same:
How pleasing Atterbury's softer hour!
How shin'd the soul, unconquer'd, in the Tower!
How can I Pulteney, Chesterfield, forget,
While Roman spirit charms, and attic wit?
Argyle, the state's whole thunder born to wield,
And shake alike the senate and the field?
Or Wyndham, just to freedom and the throne,
The master of our passions and his own?
Names which I long have lov'd, nor lov'd in vain, Rank'd with their friends, not number'd with their train;

And if yet higher the proud list should end,
Still let me say,—no follower, but a friend.

Yet think not friendship only prompts my lays;
I follow Virtue; where she shines I praise,

Point she to priest or elder, whig or tory,
 Or round a quaker's beaver cast a glory.
 I never (to my sorrow I declare)
 Din'd with the Man of Ross⁵ or my Lord Mayor.⁶
 Some in their choice of friends (nay, look not grave)
 Have still a secret bias to a knave :
 To find an honest man I beat about,
 And love him, court him, praise him, in or out.

F. Then why so few commended?

P. Not so fierce ;

Find you the virtue, and I'll find the verse.
 But random praise—the task can ne'er be done ;
 Each mother asks it for her booby son ;
 Each widow asks it for the best of men,
 For him she weeps, for him she weds again.
 Praise cannot stoop, like satire, to the ground ;
 The number may be hang'd, but not be crown'd
 Enough for half the greatest of these days
 To 'scape my censure, not expect my praise.
 Are they not rich ? what more can they pretend ?
 Dare they to hope a poet for their friend ?—
 What Richelieu wanted, Louis scarce could gain,
 And what young Ammon wish'd, but wish'd in vain.
 No power the Muse's friendship can command ;
 No power, when virtue claims it, can withstand.
 To Cato, Virgil paid one honest line ;
 O let my country's friends illumine mine !

⁵ See note 4, vol. ii. p. 126.

⁶ Sir John Barnard: see note 2, p. 42.

—What are you thinking? F. Faith, the thought's
no sin ;

I think your friends are out, and would be in.

P. If merely to come in, sir, they go out,
The way they take is strangely round about.

F. They too may be corrupted, you'll allow?

P. I only call those knaves who are so now.
Is that too little? come, then, I'll comply—
Spirit of Arnall,⁷ aid me while I lie!
Cobham's a coward! Polwarth is a slave!
And Lyttelton a dark designing knave!
St. John has ever been a wealthy fool!—
But let me add, Sir Robert's mighty dull,
Has never made a friend in private life,
And was, besides, a tyrant to his wife!

But pray, when others praise him, do I blame?
Call Verres, Wolsey, any odious name?

Why rail they then if but a wreath of mine,
O all-accomplish'd St. John! deck thy shrine?

What! shall each spur-gall'd hackney of the day,
When Paxton⁸ gives him double pots and pay,
Or each new-pension'd sycophant, pretend
To break my windows⁹ if I treat a friend;
Then wisely plead to me they meant no hurt,
But 'twas my guest at whom they threw the dirt?
Sure if I spare the minister, no rules
Of honour bind me not to maul his tools;

⁷ See note on Dunciad, B. ii. v. 315.

⁸ See note 1, p. 109.

⁹ They were broken one day while Lords Bathurst and Belsham were dining with him at Twickenham.

Sure if they cannot cut, it may be said
His saws are toothless, and his hatchet's lead.

It anger'd Turenne, once upon a day,
To see a footman kick'd that took his pay;
But when he heard th' affront the fellow gave,
Knew one a man of honour, one a knave,
The prudent general turn'd it to a jest,
And begg'd he'd take the pains to kick the rest;
Which not at present having time to do—

F. Hold, sir! for God's sake; where's th' affront to you?

Against your worship when had Sk¹ writ,
Or P*ge² pour'd forth the torrent of his wit?
Or grant the bard whose distich all commend
[In power a servant, out of power a friend]³
To Wle⁴ guilty of some venial sin,
What's that to you who ne'er was out nor in?

The priest⁵ whose flattery bedropp'd the crown,
How hurt he you? he only stain'd the gown.
And how did, pray, the florid youth⁶ offend,
Whose speech you took, and gave it to a friend?

P. Faith, it imports not much from whom it came;
Whoever borrow'd could not be to blame,
Since the whole house did afterwards the same.

Let courtly wits to wits afford supply,
 As hog to hog in huts of Westphaly:
 If one, through nature's bounty or his lord's,
 Has what the frugal dirty soil affords,
 From him the next receives it, thick or thin,
 As pure a mess almost as it came in;
 The blessed benefit, not there confin'd,
 Drops to the third, who nuzzles close behind;
 From tail to mouth they feed and they carouse;
 The last full fairly gives it to the house.

F. This filthy simile, this beastly line,
 Quite turns my stomach—P. So does flattery.
 mine;

And all your courtly civet-cats can vent,
 Perfume to you, to me is excrement.
 But hear me further—Japhet,⁷ 'tis agreed,
 Writ not, and Chartres scarce could write or read;
 In all the courts of Pindus, guiltless quite;
 But pens can forge, my friend, that cannot write;
 And must no egg in Japhet's face be thrown,
 Because the deed he forg'd was not my own?
 Must never patriot then declaim at gin
 Unless, good man! he has been fairly in?
 No zealous pastor blame a failing spouse
 Without a staring reason on his brows?
 And each blasphemer quite escape the rod,
 Because the insult's not on man but God?

Ask you what provocation I have had?
 The strong antipathy of good to bad.

⁷ See note ⁸, vol. ii. p. 120.

When truth or virtue an affront endures,
Th' affront is mine, my friend, and should be yours.
Mine, as a foe profess'd to false pretence,
Who think a coxcomb's honour like his sense ;
Mine, as a friend to every worthy mind ;
And mine as man, who feel for all mankind.

F. You're strangely proud.

P. So proud, I am no slave ;
So impudent, I own myself no knave ;
So odd, my country's ruin makes me grave.
Yes, I am proud ; I must be proud to see
Men, not afraid of God, afraid of me ;
Safe from the bar, the pulpit, and the throne,
Yet touch'd and sham'd by ridicule alone.

O sacred weapon ! left for truth's defence,
Sole dread of folly, vice, and insolence,
To all but heaven-directed hands denied,
The muse may give thee, but the gods must guide !
Reverent I touch thee ! but with honest zeal,
To rouse the watchmen of the public weal,
To virtue's work provoke the tardy hall,
And goad the prelate, slumbering in his stall.
Ye tinsel insects ! whom a court maintains,
That counts your beauties only by your stains,
Spin all your cobwebs o'er the eye of day !
The muse's wing shall brush you all away.
All his grace preaches, all his lordship sings,
All that makes saints of queens, and gods of kings ;
All, all but truth, drops dead-born from the press,
Like the last gazette, or the last address.

When black ambition stains a public cause,
A monarch's sword when mad vainglory draws,
Not Waller's wreath can hide the nation's scar,
Nor Boileau turn the feather to a star.

Not so when, diadem'd with rays divine,
Touch'd with the flame that breaks from virtue's shrine,

Her priestess muse forbids the good to die,
And opes the temple of eternity.
There other trophies deck the truly brave
Than such as Anstis⁸ casts into the grave;
Far other stars than * * * and * * *⁹ wear, •
And may descend to Mordington from Stair;—
Such as on Hough's¹ unsullied mitre shine,
Or beam, good Digby! from a heart like thine.
Let envy howl, while heaven's whole chorus sings,
And bark at honour not conferr'd by kings;
Let flattery sickening see the incense rise,
Sweet to the world, and grateful to the skies:
Truth guards the poet, sanctifies the line,
And makes immortal, verse as mean as mine.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law.
Here, last of Britons! let your names be read;
Are none, none living? let me praise the dead;
And for that cause which made your fathers shine,
Fall by the votes of their degenerate line.

F. Alas! alas! pray end what you began,
And write next winter more Essays on Man.

ON RECEIVING FROM THE RIGHT HONOUR-ABLE THE LADY FRANCES SHIRLEY A STANDISH AND TWO PENS¹

YES, I beheld th' Athenian queen
Descend in all her sober charms;
'And take (she said, and smil'd serene),
Take at this hand celestial arms.

Secure the radiant weapons wield;
This golden lance shall guard desert,
And if a vice dares keep the field,
This steel shall stab it to the heart.'

Aw'd, on my bended knees I fell,
Receiv'd the weapons of the sky,
And dipp'd them in the sable well,
The fount of fame or infamy.

'What well? what weapon? (Flavia cries)
A standish, steel, and golden pen!
It came from Bertrand's,² not the skies;
I gave it you to write again.

You’ll bring a house (I mean of peers)
Red, blue, and green, nay, white and black,

‘You’d write as smooth again on glass,
And run on ivory so glib,
As not to stiek at fool or ass,
Nor stop at flattery or fib.

‘Athenian queen ! and sober charms !
I tell ye, fool ! there’s nothing in’t :
’Tis Venus, Venus gives these arms ;
In Dryden’s Virgil see the print.

‘Come, if you’ll be a quiet soul,
That dares tell neither truth nor lies,
I’ll list you in the harmless roll
Of those that sing of these poor eyes.’

CELIA, we know, is sixty-five,
Yet Celia’s face is seventeen ;
Thus winter in her breast must live,
While summer in her face is seen

How cruel Celia’s fate ! who hence
Our heart’s devotion cannot try ;
Too pretty for our reverence,
Too ancient for our gallantry.

"This poem I transcribed from a rough draft in Pope's own hand. He left many blanks for fear of the Argus eye of those who, if they cannot find, can fabricate treason; yet, spite of his precaution, it fell into the hands of his enemies. To the hieroglyphics there are direct allusions, I think, in some of the notes on the Dunciad. It was lent me by a grandson of Lord Chetwynd, an intimate friend of the famous Lord Bolingbroke, who gratified his curiosity by a boxful of the rubbish and sweepings of Pope's study, whose executor he was, in conjunction with Lord Marchmont.'" THE FOURTH EPISTLE OF THE FIRST BOOK
OF HORACE.¹

SAY, St. John, who alone peruse
With candid eye the mimic muse,
What schemes of politics, or laws,
In Gallic lands the patriot draws?
Is then a greater work in hand,
Than all the tomes of Haines's band?
'Or shoots he folly as it flies?
Or catches manners as they rise?'
Or urged by unquench'd native heat,
Does St. John Greenwich sports repeta?
Where (emulous of Chartres' fame)
E'en Chartres' self is scarce a name.

To you (the all envied gift of heaven)
The indulgent gods, unask'd, have given
A form complete in every part,
And, to enjoy that gift, the art.

What could a tender mother's care
Wish better, to her favourite heir,
Than wit, and fame, and lucky hours,
A stock of health, and golden showers,
And graceful fluency of speech,
Precepts before unknown to teach?

Amidst thy various ebbs of fear,
And gleaming hope, and black despair,
Yet let thy friend this truth impart,
A truth I tell with bleeding heart,
(In justice for your labours past)
That every day shall be your last ;
That every hour you life renew
Is to your injur'd country due.

In spite of fears, of mercy spite,
My genius still must rail, and write.

We'll ridicule both church and state.

A SERMON AGAINST ADULTERY,

BEING SOBER ADVICE FROM HORACE TO THE YOUNG GENTLEMEN ABOUT TOWN, AS DELIVERED IN HIS SECOND SERMON. IMITATED IN THE MANNER OF MR. POPE.¹

TO ALEXANDER POPE, ESQ.

SIR,

I HAVE so great a trust in your indulgence towards me, as to believe you cannot but patronize this Imitation, so much in your own manner, and whose birth I may truly say is owing to you. In that confidence, I would not suppress the criticisms made upon it by the Reverend Doctor;² the rather, since he has promised to mend the faults in the next edition, with the same goodness he has practised to Milton. I hope you will believe that while I express my regard for you, it is only out of modesty I conceal my name; since, though perhaps I may not profess myself your admirer, so much as some others, I cannot but be, with as much inward respect, good-will, and zeal, as any man,

Dear Sir, your most affectionate and faithful Servant.

¹ This imitation of the Second Satire of the First Book of Horace was certainly written by Pope. See Memoir prefixed to these volumes, p. c.

THE tribe of templars, players, apothecaries,
 Pimps, poets, wits, Lord Fannys, Lady Marys,
 And all the court in tears, and half the town,
 Lament dear charming Oldfield,¹ dead and gone!
 Engaging Oldfield! who, with grace and ease,
 Could join the arts, to ruin and to please.

Not so, who of ten thousand gull'd her knight,
 Then ask'd ten thousand for a second night;
 The gallant too, to whom she paid it down,
 Liv'd to refuse that mistress half a crown.²

Con. Philips³ cries, 'A sneaking dog I hate.'
 That's all three lovers have for their estate!
 'Treat on, treat on,' is her eternal note,
 And lands and tenements go down her throat.

 And, in the happy minute, picks your fob;

³ Mrs. Constantia Philips, the actress.

Yet starves herself, so little her own friend,
 And thirsts and hungers only at one end :
 A self-tormentor, worse than (in the play)
 The wretch, whose avarice drove his son away.

But why all this? beloved, 'tis my theme :
 'Women and fools are always in extreme.'
 Rufa's at either end a common shore,
 Sweet Moll and Jack are civet cat and boar.
 Nothing in nature is so lewd as Peg,
 Yet for the world she would not show her leg!
 While bashful Jenny, e'en at morning prayer,
 Spreads her fore-buttocks to the navel bare.
 But different taste in different men prevails,
 And one is fir'd by heads, and one by tails ;
 Some feel no flames but at the court or ball,
 And others hunt white aprons in the mall.

My Lord of Lo—n, chancing to remark
 A noted Dean much busied in the park,
 'Proceed (he cried), proceed, my reverend brother.
 'Tis fornicatio simplex, and no other.
 Better than lust for boys, with Pope and Turk,
 Or others' spouses, like my Lord of ——.'⁴

May no such praise (cries J—s) e'er be mine,
 J—s, who bows at Hi—sb—w's hoary shrine.

All you who think the city ne'er can thrive,
 'Till every cuckold-maker's flay'd alive,
 Attend, while I their miseries explain,
 And pity men of pleasure still in pain !

⁴ Cork.

Survey the pangs they bear, the risks they run,
Where the most lucky are but last undone.
See wretched Monsieur flies to save his throat,
And quits his mistress, money, ring, and note !
K—— of his footman's borrow'd livery stript,
By worthier footmen piss'd upon and whipt !
Plunder'd by thieves, or lawyers, which is worse,
One bleeds in person, and one bleeds in purse ;
This meets a blanket, and that meets a cudgel—
And all applaud the justice—all, but Budgell.

How much more safe, dear countrymen ! his state,
Who trades in frigates of the second rate !
And yet some care of S—st should be had,
Nothing so mean for which he can't run mad ;
His wit confirms him but a slave the more,
And makes a princess whom he found a whore.
The youth might save much trouble and expense,
Were he a dupe of only common sense.
But here's his point ! a wench (he cries) for me !
'I never touch a dame of quality.'

To P—l—r's bed no actress comes amiss,
He courts the whole personæ dramatis :
He too can say, 'With wives I never sin :'
But singing girls and mimics draw him in.
Sure, worthy sir, the difference is not great,
With whom you lose your credit and estate !
This, or that person, what avails to shun ?
What's wrong is wrong, wherever it be done :
The ease, support, and lustre of your life,
Destroy'd alike with strumpet, maid, or wife.

What push'd poor E—s on th' imperial whore?
'Twas but to be where CHARLES had been before.
The fatal steel unjustly was applied,
When not his lust offended, but his pride:
Too hard a penance for defeated sin,
Himself shut out, and Jacob Hall⁶ let in.

Suppose that honest part that rules us all
Should rise, and say—'Sir Robert! or Sir Paul!
Did I demand, in my most vigorous hour,
A thing descended from the Conqueror?
Or when my pulse beat highest, ask for any Such nicety as Lady or Lord Fanny?'
What would you answer? could you have the face,
When the poor sufferer humbly mourn'd his case,
To cry, 'You weep the favours of her GRACE?'

Hath not indulgent nature spread a feast,
And given enough for man, enough for beast?
But man corrupt, perverse in all his ways,
In search of vanities from nature strays:
Yea, though the blessing's more than he can use,
Shuns the permitted, the forbid pursues! [spring,
Weigh well the cause from whence these evils
'Tis in thyself, and not in God's good thing:
Then, lest repentance punish such a life,
Never, ah, never! kiss thy neighbour's wife.

First, silks and diamonds veil no finer shape,
Or plumper thigh, than lurk in humble crape:

⁶ The Duchess of Cleveland was said to have been in love with Jacob Hall, the famous rope-dancer, and gave him a salary.

And secondly, how innocent a belle
Is she who shows what ware she has to sell;
Not lady-like, displays a milk-white breast,
And hides in sacred sluttishness the rest.

Our ancient kings (and sure those kings were wise,
Who judg'd themselves, and saw with their own eyes),

A war-horse never for the service chose,
But ey'd him round, and stript off all the clothes;
For well they knew, proud trappings serve to hide
A heavy chest, thick neck, or heaving side;
But fools are ready chaps, agog to buy,
Let but a comely forehead strike the eye:
No eagle sharper, every charm to find,
To all defects, Ty——y not so blind:
Goose-rump'd, hawk-nos'd, swan-footed, is my dear,
They'll praise her elbow, heel, or tip o' th' ear.

A lady's face is all you see undress'd
(For none but Lady M—— show'd the rest);
But if to charms more latent you pretend,
What lines encompass, and what works defend!
Dangers on dangers! obstacles by dozens!
Spies, guardians, guests, old women, aunts, and Could you directly to her person go, [cousins.
Stays will obstruct above, and hoops below,
And if the dame says yes, the dress says no.
Not thus at Needham's;⁶ your judicious eye
May measure there the breast, the hip, the thigh!

⁶ Mrs. Needham was a notorious bawd.

And will you run to perils, sword, and law,
All for a thing you ne'er so much as saw?

'The hare once seiz'd, the hunter needs no more
The little scut he so pursu'd before,
Love follows flying game (as Suckling sings),
And 'tis for that the wanton boy has wings.'
Why let him sing—but when you're in the wrong.
Think you to cure the mischief with a song?
Has nature set no bounds to wild desire?
No sense to guide, no reason to inquire
What solid happiness, what empty pride?
And what is best indulg'd, or best denied?
If neither gems adorn, nor silver tip
The flowing bowl, will you not wet your lip?
When sharp with hunger, scorn you to be fed,
Except on peachicks, at the Bedford-head?
Or when a tight, neat girl, will serve the turn,
In errant pride continue stiff, and burn?
I'm a plain man, whose maxim is profess,
'The thing at hand is of all things the best.'
But her who will, and then will not comply,
Whose word is If, Perhaps, and By-and-by,
Zounds! let some eunuch or platonic take——
So B——t cries, philosopher and rake!
Who asks no more (right reasonable peer)
'Than not to wait too long, nor pay too dear.
Give me a willing nymph! 'tis all I care,
Extremely clean, and tolerably fair,
Her shape her own, whatever shape she have,
And just that white and red which nature gave.

Her I transported touch, transported view!
 And call her Angel! Goddess! M——ue!
 No furious husband thunders at the door;
 No barking dog, no household in a roar;
 From gleaming swords no shrieking women run;
 No wretched wife cries out, Undone! Undone!
 Seiz'd in the fact, and in her cuckold's power,
 She kneels, she weeps, and worse! resigns her
 dower;

Me, naked me, to posts, to pumps they draw,
 To shame eternal, or eternal law.
 Oh love, be deep tranquillity my luck!
 No mistress H—ysh—m near, no Lady B——ck!
 For, to be taken, is the devil in hell;
 This truth let L——l, J——ys, O——w tell.

EPITAPHS.

*His saltem accumulem donis, et fungar inani
 Munere!* VIRG.

ON CHARLES EARL OF DORSET,
 IN THE CHURCH OF WITHYAM, SUSSEX.

DORSET, the grace of courts, the Muses' pride,
 Patron of arts, and judge of nature, died.
 The scourge of pride, though sanctified or great,
 Of fops in learning, and of knaves in state:

Yet soft his nature, though severe his lay,
 His anger moral, and his wisdom gay.
 Bless'd satirist! who touch'd the mean so true,
 As show'd, vice had his hate and pity too.
 Bless'd courtier! who could king and country please,
 Yet sacred keep his friendships and his ease.
 Bless'd peer! his great forefathers' every grace
 Reflecting, and reflected in his race;
 Where other Buckhursts, other Dorsets shine,
 And patriots still, or poets, deck the line.

ON SIR WILLIAM TRUMBULL,

ONE OF THE PRINCIPAL SECRETARIES OF STATE TO KING WILLIAM III.

Who, having resigned his Place, died in his Retirement at Easthamsted, in Berkshire, 1716.

A PLEASING form, a firm, yet cautious mind;
 Sincere, though prudent; constant, yet resign'd:
 Honour unchang'd, a principle profest,
 Fix'd to one side, but moderate to the rest:
 An honest courtier, yet a patriot too,
 Just to his prince, and to his country true:
 Fill'd with the sense of age, the fire of youth,
 A scorn of wrangling, yet a zeal for truth;
 A generous faith, from superstition free,
 A love to peace, and hate of tyranny;
 Such this man was, who now, from earth remov'd,
 At length enjoys that liberty he lov'd.

ON THE HON. SIMON HARCOURT,

ONLY SON OF THE LORD CHANCELLOR HARCOURT,

At the Church of Stanton-Harcourt, Oxfordshire, 1720.

To this sad shrine, whoe'er thou art, draw near;
 Here lies the friend most lov'd, the son most dear;
 Who ne'er knew joy but friendship might divide,
 Or gave his father grief but when he died.
 How vain is reason, eloquence how weak!
 If Pope must tell what Harcourt cannot speak.
 Oh, let thy once-lov'd friend inscribe thy stone,
 And with a father's sorrows mix his own!

ON JAMES CRAGGS, ESQ.

IN WESTMINSTER-ABBEY.

JACOBUS CRAGGS,

REGNI MAGNÆ BRITANNIÆ A SECRETIS,

ET CONSILIIS SANCTIORIBUS:

PRINCIPIS PARITER AC POPULI AMOR ET DELICIE:

VIXIT TITULIS ET INVIDIA MAJOR

ANNOS, HEU PAUCOS, XXXV.

OB. FEB. XIV. MDCCXX.

STATESMAN, yet friend to truth! of soul sincere,
 In action faithful, and in honour clear!
 Who broke no promise, serv'd no private end,
 Who gain'd no title, and who lost no friend;
 Ennobled by himself, by all approv'd,
 Prais'd, wept, and honour'd, by the Muse he lov'd

ON MR. ROWE.

IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

THY reliques, Rowe ! to this sad shrine we trust,
And near thy Shakspeare place thy honour'd bust.
Oh, next him, skill'd to draw the tender tear—
For never heart felt passion more sincere—
To nobler sentiment to fire the brave,—
For never Briton more disdain'd a slave !
Peace to thy gentle shade, and endless rest ;
Blest in thy genius, in thy love too blest !
And blest, that timely from our scene remov'd,
Thy soul enjoys the liberty it lov'd.

To these, so mourn'd in death, so lov'd in life,
The childless parent and the widow'd wife
With tears inscribes this monumental stone,
That holds their ashes and expects her own.

ON MRS. CORBET,

WHO DIED OF A CANCER IN HER BREAST.

HERE rests a woman, good without pretence,
Bless'd with plain reason and with sober sense :
No conquest she but o'er herself desir'd,
No arts essay'd but not to be admir'd.
Passion and pride were to her soul unknown,
Convinc'd that virtue only is our own.

So unaffected, so compos'd a mind,
 So firm, yet soft, so strong, yet so refin'd,
 Heaven, as its purest gold, by tortures tried;
 The saint sustain'd it, but the woman died.

ON THE MONUMENT OF THE HON. R. DIGBY AND OF HIS SISTER MARY.

ERECTED BY THEIR FATHER LORD DIGBY,

In the Church of Sherborne, in Dorsetshire, 1727.

Go! fair example of untainted youth,
 Of modest wisdom and pacific truth:
 Compos'd in sufferings, and in joy sedate,
 Good without noise, without pretension great:
 Just of thy word, in every thought sincere,
 Who knew no wish but what the world might hear:
 Of softest manners, unaffected mind,
 Lover of peace, and friend of humankind!
 Go live! for Heaven's eternal year is thine;
 Go, and exalt thy mortal to divine.

And thou, bless'd maid! attendant on his doom,
 Pensive hath follow'd to the silent tomb,
 Steer'd the same course to the same quiet shore,
 Not parted long, and now to part no more!
 Go then, where only bliss sincere is known!
 Go where to love and to enjoy are one!

Yet take these tears, mortality's relief,
 And till we share your joys, forgive our grief:
 These little rites, a stone, a verse, receive;
 Tis all a father, all a friend can give!

ON SIR GODFREY KNELLER,

IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY, 1723.

KNELLER, by Heaven, and not a master, taught,
Whose art was nature, and whose pictures thought:
Now for two ages having snatch'd from fate
Whate'er was beauteous, or whate'er was great,
Lies crown'd with princes' honours, poets' lays,
Due to his merit and brave thirst of praise.

Living, great Nature fear'd he might outvie
Her works; and, dying, fears herself may die.

ON GENERAL HENRY WITHERS,

IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY, 1729.

HERE, Withers! rest; thou bravest, gentlest mind,
Thy country's friend, but more of humankind.
O born to arms! O worth in youth approv'd!
O soft humanity, in age belov'd!
For thee the hardy veteran drops a tear,
And the gay courtier feels the sigh sincere.

Withers, adieu! yet not with thee remove
Thy martial spirit or thy social love!
Amidst corruption, luxury, and rage,
Still leave some ancient virtues to our age;
Nor let us say (those English glories gone)
The last true Briton lies beneath this stone.

ON MR. ELIJAH FENTON,

AT EASTHAMSTED, BERKS, 1730.

THIS modest stone, what few vain marbles can,
May truly say, Here lies an honest man ;
A poet bless'd beyond the poet's fate, [great ;
Whom heaven kept sacred from the proud and
Foe to loud praise, and friend to learned ease,
Content with science in the vale of peace.
Calmly he look'd on either life, and here
Saw nothing to regret, or there to fear ;
From nature's temperate feast rose satisfied,
Thank'd Heaven that he had liv'd, and that he died.

ON MR. GAY,

IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY, 1732.

OF manners gentle, of affections mild ;
In wit a man ; simplicity a child :
With native humour tempering virtuous rage,
Form'd to delight at once and lash the age :
Above temptation in a low estate,
And uncorrupted e'en among the great :
A safe companion, and an easy friend,
Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end.
These are thy honours ! not that here thy bust
Is mix'd with heroes, or with kings thy dust :
But that the worthy and the good shall say,
Striking their pensive bosoms—'Here lies Gay !'

INTENDED FOR SIR ISAAC NEWTON.

ISAACUS NEWTONUS,

QUEM IMMORTALEM

HOC MARMOR FATETUR.

NATURE and Nature's laws lay hid in night :

ON DR. FRANCIS ATTERBURY,

BISHOP OF ROCHESTER, WHO DIED IN EXILE AT PARIS, 1732.

[His only daughter having expired in his arms immediately after she arrived in France to see him.]

DIALOGUE.

She. YES, we have liv'd—One pang, and then we part !

May heaven, dear father ! now have all thy heart.
Yet ah ! how once we lov'd, remember still,
Till you are dust like me.

He. Dear shade ! I will :
Then mix this dust with thine—O spotless ghost !
O more than fortune, friends, or country lost !
Is there on earth one care, one wish beside ?
Yes—' Save my country, Heaven ! ' he said, and died

ON EDMUND DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM,

WHO DIED IN THE NINETEENTH YEAR OF HIS AGE, 1736.

IF modest youth, with cool reflection crown'd,
And every opening virtue blooming round,
Could save a parent's justest pride from fate,
Or add one patriot to a sinking state,
This weeping marble had not ask'd thy tear,
Or sadly told, how many hopes lie here !
The living virtue now had shone approv'd ;
The senate heard him, and his country lov'd.
Yet softer honours and less noisy fame
Attend the shade of gentle Buckingham :
In whom a race, for courage fam'd and art,
Ends in the milder merit of the heart ;
And, chiefs or sages long to Britain given,
Pays the last tribute of a saint to heaven.

FOR ONE WHO WOULD NOT BE BURIED IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

HEROES and kings ! your distance keep ;
In peace let one poor poet sleep,
Who never flatter'd folks like you :
Let Horace blush, and Virgil too.

ANOTHER ON THE SAME.

UNDER this marble, or under this sill,
Or under this turf, or e'en what they will,

Whatever an heir, or a friend in his stead,
Or any good creature shall lay o'er my head,
Lies one who ne'er car'd, and still cares not, a pin
What they said, or may say, of the mortal within;
But who, living and dying, serene, still and free,
Trusts in God that as well as he was he shall be.

ON TWO LOVERS STRUCK DEAD BY LIGHTNING.

WHEN eastern lovers feed the funeral fire,
On the same pile their faithful fair expire;
Here pitying heaven that virtue mutual found.
And blasted both, that it might neither wound.
Hearts so sincere th' Almighty saw well pleas'd,
Sent his own lightning, and the victims seiz'd.

THINK not by rigorous judgment seiz'd,
A pair so faithful could expire;
Victims so pure heaven saw well pleas'd,
And snatch'd them in celestial fire.

LIVE well, and fear no sudden fate:
When God calls virtue to the grave,
Alike 'tis justice, soon or late,
Mercy alike to kill or save.
Virtue unmov'd ear hear the call,
And face the flash that melts the ball.

THE DUNCIAD.

IN FOUR BOOKS.

A LETTER TO THE PUBLISHER:

OCCASIONED BY THE FIRST CORRECT EDITION OF THE DUNCIAD.

It is with pleasure I hear that you have procured a correct copy of the Dunciad, which the many surreptitious ones have rendered so necessary; and it is yet with more, that I am informed it will be attended with a Commentary; a work so requisite, that I cannot think the author himself would have omitted it, had he approved of the first appearance of this poem.

Such Notes as have occurred to me I herewith send you: you will oblige me by inserting them amongst those which are, or will be, transmitted to you by others; since not only the author's friends, but even strangers, appear engaged by humanity, to take some care of an orphan of so much genius and spirit, which its parent seems to have abandoned from the very beginning, and suffered to step into the world naked, unguarded, and unattended.

It was upon reading some of the abusive papers lately published, that my great regard to a person whose friendship I esteem as one of the chief honours of my life, and a much greater respect to truth than to him or any man living, engaged me in inquiries of which the enclosed Notes are the fruit.

I perceived that most of these authors had been (doubtless very wisely) the first aggressors. They had tried, till they were weary, what was to be got by railing at each other: nobody was either concerned or surprised if this or that scribbler was proved a dunce, but every one was curious to read what could be said to prove Mr. Pope one, and was ready to pay something for such a discovery; a stratagem which, would they fairly own it, might not only reconcile them to me, but screen them from the resentment of their lawful superiors, whom they daily abuse, only (as I charitably hope) to get that by them, which they cannot get from them.

I found this was not all: ill success in that had transported them to personal abuse, either of himself, or (what I think he could less forgive) of his friends. They had called men of virtue and honour bad men, long before he had either leisure or inclination to call them bad writers; and some of them had been such old offenders, that he had quite forgotten their persons, as well as their slanders, till they were pleased to revive them.

Now what had Mr. Pope done before to incense them? He had published those works which are in the hands of every body, in which not the least mention is made of any of them. And what has he done since? He has laughed, and written the Dunciad. What has that said of them? A very serious truth, which the public had said before, that they were dull; and what it had no sooner said, but they themselves were at great pains to procure, or even purchase, room in the prints to testify under their hands to the truth of it.

I should still have been silent, if either I had seen any inclination in my friend to be serious with such accusers, or if they had only meddled with his writings; since whoever publishes, puts himself on his trial by his country: but when his moral character was attacked, and in a manner from which neither truth nor virtue can secure the most innocent; in a manner which, though it annihilates the credit of the accusation with the just and impartial, yet aggravates very much the guilt of the accusers — I mean by authors without names — then I thought, since the danger was common to all, the concern ought to be so; and that it was an act of justice to detect the authors, not only on this account, but as many of them are the same who, for several years past, have made free with the greatest names in church and state, exposed to the world the private misfortunes of families, abused all, even to women; and whose prostituted papers (for one or other party in the unhappy divisions of their country) have insulted the fallen, the friendless, the exiled, and the dead.

Besides this, which I take to be public concern, I have already confessed I had a private one.

I am one of that number who have long loved and esteemed Mr. Pope ; and had often declared it was not his capacity or writings (which we ever thought the least valuable part of his character), but the honest, open, and beneficent man, that we most esteemed and loved in him. Now, if what these people say were believed, I must appear to all my friends either a fool or a knave ; either imposed on myself, or imposing on them ; so that I am as much interested in the confutation of these calumnies as he is himself.

I am no author, and consequently not to be suspected either of jealousy or resentment against any of the men, of whom scarce one is known to me by sight ; and as for their writings, I have sought them (on this one occasion) in vain, in the closets and libraries of all my acquaintance. I had still been in the dark, if a gentleman had not procured me (I suppose from some of themselves, for they are generally much more dangerous friends than enemies) the passages I send you. I solemnly protest I have added nothing to the malice or absurdity of them ; which it behoves me to declare, since the vouchers themselves will be so soon and so irrecoverably lost. You may, in some measure, prevent it, by preserving at least their titles,¹ and discovering (as far as you can depend on the truth of your information) the names of the concealed authors.

The first objection I have heard made to the poem is, that the persons are too obscure for satire. The persons themselves, rather than allow the objection, would forgive the satire; and if one could be tempted to afford it a serious answer, were not all assassins, popular insurrections, the insolence of the rabble without doors, and of domestics within, most wrongfully chastised, if the meanness of offenders indemnified them from punishment? On the contrary, obscurity renders them more dangerous, as less thought of: law can pronounce judgment only on open facts; morality alone can pass censure on intentions of mischief; so that for secret calumny, or the arrow flying in the dark, there is no public punishment left but what a good writer inflicts.

The next objection is, that these sort of authors are poor. That might be pleaded as an excuse at the Old Bailey for lesser crimes than defamation (for it is the case of almost all who are tried there), but sure it can be none here: for who will pretend that the robbing another of his reputation supplies the want of it in himself? I question not but such authors are poor, and heartily wish the objection were removed by any honest livelihood; but poverty is here the accident, not the subject. He who describes malice and villany to be pale and meagre, expresses not the least anger against paleness or leanness, but against malice and villany. The apothecary in Romeo and Juliet is poor; but is he therefore justified in vending poison? Not but poverty itself becomes a just subject of satire, when it is the consequence of vice, prodigality, or neglect of one's lawful calling; for then it increases the public burden, fills the streets and highways with robbers, and the garrets with clippers, coiners, and weekly journalists.

But admitting that two or three of these offend less in their morals than in their writings; must poverty make nonsense sacred? If so, the fame of bad authors would be much better consulted than that of all the good ones in the world; and not one of a hundred had ever been called by his right name.

They mistake the whole matter: it is not charity to encourage them in the way they follow, but to get them out of it; for men are not bunglers because they are poor, but they are poor because they are bunglers.

Is it not pleasant enough to hear our authors crying out on the one hand, as if their persons and characters were too sacred for satire; and the public objecting, on the other, that they are too mean even for ridicule? But whether bread or fame be their end, it must be allowed, our author, by and in this poem, has mercifully given them a little of both.

There are two or three who, by their rank and fortune, have no benefit from the former objections, supposing them good, and these I was sorry to see in such company : but if, without any provocation, two or three gentlemen will fall upon one, in an affair wherein his interest and reputation are equally embarked, they cannot, certainly, after they have been content to print themselves his enemies, complain of being put into the number of them.

Others, I am told, pretend to have been once his friends. Surely they are their enemies who say so, since nothing can be more odious than to treat a friend as they have done. But of this I cannot persuade myself, when I consider the constant and eternal aversion of all bad writers to a good one.

Such as claim a merit from being his admirers, I would gladly ask, if it lays him under a personal obligation. At that rate, he would be the most obliged humble servant in the world. I dare swear for these in particular, he never desired them to be his admirers, nor promised in return to be theirs : that had truly been a sign he was of their acquaintance ; but would not the malicious world have suspected such an approbation of some motive worse than ignorance, in the author of the Essay on Criticism ? Be it as it will, the reasons of their admiration and of his contempt are equally subsisting, for his works and theirs are the very same that they were.

One, therefore, of their assertions I believe may be true, 'that he has a contempt for their writings : ' and there is another which would probably be sooner allowed by himself than by any good judge beside, 'that his own have found too much success with the public.' But as it cannot consist with his modesty to claim this as a justice, it lies not on him, but entirely on the public, to defend its own judgment.

There remains, what, in my opinion, might seem a better plea for these people than any they have made use of :—If obscurity or poverty were to exempt a man from satire, much more should folly or dulness, which are still more involuntary ; nay, as much so as personal deformity. But even this will not help them : deformity becomes an object of ridicule when a man sets up for being handsome ; and so must dulness, when he sets up for a wit. They are not ridiculed because ridicule in itself is, or ought to be, a pleasure ; but because it is just to undeceive and vindicate the honest and unpretending part of mankind from imposition ; because particular interest ought to yield to general, and a great number, who are not naturally fools, ought never to be made so, in complaisance to those who are. Accordingly we find that in all ages all vain pretenders, were they ever so poor, or ever so dull, have been constantly the topics of the most candid satirists, from the Codrus of Juvenal to the Damon of Boileau.

Having mentioned Boileau, the greatest poet and most judicious critic of his age and country, admirable for his talents, and yet perhaps more admirable for his judgment in the proper application of them, I cannot help remarking the resemblance betwixt him and our author, in qualities, fame, and fortune; in the distinctions shown them by their superiors, in the general esteem of their equals, and in their extended reputation amongst foreigners; in the latter of which ours has met with the better fate, as he has had for his translators persons of the most eminent rank and abilities in their respective nations.² But the resemblance holds in nothing more than in their being equally abused by the ignorant pretenders to poetry of their times; of which not the least memory will remain but in their own writings, and in the notes made upon them. What Boileau has done in almost all his poems, our author has only in this. I dare answer for him he will do it in no more ; and on this principle, of attacking few but who had slandered him, he could not have done it at all, had he been confined from censuring obscure and worthless persons : for scarce any other were his enemies. However, as the parity is so remarkable, I hope it will continue to the last ; and if ever he should give us an edition of this poem himself, I may see some of them treated as gently, on their repentance or better merit, as Perrault and Quinault were at last by Boileau.

² Essay on Criticism, in French verse, by General Hamilton; the same, in verse also, by Monsieur Roboton, counsellor and privy secretary to King George I., after by the Abbé Resnel, in verse, with notes. Rape of the Lock, in French, by the Princess of Conti, Paris, 1728; and in Italian verse by the Abbé Conti, a noble Venetian; and by the Marquis Rangoni, envoy extraordinary from Modena to King George II. Others of his works by Salvini of Florence, &c. His Essays and Dissertations on Homer, several times translated into French. Essay on Man, by the Abbé Resnel, in verse, by Monsieur Silhouette, in prose, 1787; and since by others in French, Italian, and Latin.

In one point I must be allowed to think the character of our English poet the more amiable ; he has not been a follower of fortune or success ; he has lived with the great without flattery ; been a friend to men in power without pensions, from whom, as he asked, so he received, no favour, but what was done him in his friends. As his satires were the more just for being delayed, so were his panegyrics ; bestowed only on such persons as he had familiarly known, only for such virtues as he had long observed in them, and only at such times as others cease to praise, if not begin to calumniate them—I mean when out of power, or out of fashion.⁸ A satire, therefore, on writers so notorious for the contrary practice, became no man so well as himself; as none, it is plain, was so little in their friendships, or so much in that of those whom they had most abused; namely, the greatest and best of all parties. Let me add a further reason, that, though engaged in their friendships, he never espoused their animosities; and can almost singly challenge this honour, not to have written a line of any man which, through guilt, through shame, or through fear, through variety of fortune, or change of interests, he was ever unwilling to own.

I shall conclude with remarking, what a pleasure it must be to every reader of humanity to see all along that our author, in his very laughter, is not indulging his own ill nature, but only punishing that of others. As to his poem, those alone are capable of doing it justice who, to use the words of a great writer, know how hard it is (with regard both to his subject and his manner) vetustis dare novitatem, obsoletis nitorem, obscuris lucem, fastiditis gratiam. DENNIS, REMARKS ON PRINCE ARTHUR.

I CANNOT but think it the most reasonable thing in the world to distinguish good writers, by discouraging the bad: nor is it an ill-natured thing, in relation even to the very persons upon whom the reflections are made. It is true, it may deprive them a little the sooner of a short profit and a transitory reputation; but then it may have a good effect, and oblige them (before it be too late) to decline that for which they are so very unfit, and to have recourse to something in which they may be more successful.

CHARACTER OF MR. P. 1716.

The persons whom Boileau has attacked in his writings have been for the most part authors, years diligent, punctual, and incorruptible (though without any other assistance of fortune), he was suddenly displaced by the minister, in the sixty-eighth year of his age, and died two months after, in 1741. He was a person of universal learning, and an enlarged conversation; no man had a warmer heart for his friend, or a sincerer attachment to the constitution of his country; and yet, for all this, the public would never believe him to be the author of this Letter.

and most of those authors poets : and the censures he hath passed upon them have been confirmed by all Europe.

GILDON, PREFACE TO HIS NEW REHEARSAL.

It is the common cry of the poetasters of the town, and their fautors, that it is an ill-natured thing to expose the pretenders to wit and poetry. The judges and magistrates may with full as good reason be reproached with ill nature for putting the laws in execution against a thief or impostor. The same will hold in the Republic of Letters, if the critics and judges will let every ignorant pretender to scribbling pass on the world.

THEOBALD, LETTER TO MIST, JUNE 22, 1728.

Attacks may be levelled either against failures in genius, or against the preterensions of writing without one.

TESTIMONIES OF AUTHORS CONCERNING OUR POET AND HIS WORKS.

M. SCRIBLERUS LECTORI S.

BEFORE we present thee with our exertations on this most delectable poem (drawn from the many volumes of our adversaria on modern authors), we shall here, according to the laudable usage of editors, collect the various judgments of the learned concerning our poet; various, indeed, not only of different authors, but of the same author at different seasons. Nor shall we gather only the testimonies of such eminent wits as would of course descend to posterity, and consequently be read without our collection; but we shall likewise, with incredible labour, seek out for divers others, which, but for this our diligence, could never, at the distance of a few months, appear to the eye of the most curious. Hereby thou mayst not only receive the delectation of variety, but also arrive at a more certain judgment, by a grave and circumspect comparison of the witnesses with each other, or of each with himself. Hence, also, thou wilt be enabled to draw reflections, not only of a critical but a moral nature, by being let into many particulars of the person as well as genius, and of the fortune as well as merit, of our author: in which, if I relate some things of little concern, peradventure, to thee, and some of as little even to him, I entreat thee to consider how minutely all true critics and commentators are wont to insist upon such, and how material they seem to themselves, if to none other. Forgive me, gentle reader, if (following learned example) I, ever and anon, become tedious: allow me to take the same pains to find whether my author were good or bad, well or ill natured, modest or arrogant, as another whether his author was fair or brown, short or tall, or whether he wore a coat or a cassock.

We purposed to begin with his life, parentage, and education; but as to these, even his contemporaries do exceedingly differ. One saith¹ he was educated at home; another,² that he was bred at St. Omer's by Jesuits; a third,³ not at St. Omer's, but at Oxford; a fourth,⁴ that he had no university education at all. Those who allow him to be bred at home differ as much concerning his tutor: one saith⁵ he was kept by his father on purpose; a second,⁶ that he was an itinerant priest; a third,⁷ that he was a parson; one⁸ calleth him a secular clergyman of the Church of Rome; another⁹ a monk. As little do they agree about his father, whom one¹⁰ supposeth, like the father of Hesiod, a tradesman or merchant; another,¹¹ a husbandman; another,¹² a hatter, &c. Nor has an author been wanting to give our poet such a father as Apuleius hath to Plato, Jamblichus to Pythagoras, and divers to Homer, namely, a demon: for thus Mr. Gildon:¹³ ‘Certain it is that his original is not from Adam, but the devil, and that he wanteth nothing but horns and tail to be the exact resemblance of his infernal father.’ Finding, therefore, such contrariety of opinions, and (whatever be ours of this sort of generation) not being fond to enter into controversy, we shall defer writing the Life of our poet till authors can determine among themselves what parents or education he had, or whether he had any education or parents at all.

though not less uncertain the judgments concerning them; beginning with his Essay on Criticism, of which hear first the most ancient of critics,

MR. JOHN DENNIS.

‘His precepts are false or trivial, or both; his thoughts are crude and abortive; his expressions absurd, his numbers harsh and unmusical, his rhymes trivial and common. Instead of majesty, we have something that is very mean; instead of gravity, something that is very boyish; and instead of perspicuity and lucid order, we have but too often obscurity and confusion.’ And in another place: ‘What rare numbers are here! would not one swear that this youngster had espoused some antiquated muse, who had sued out a divorce from some superannuated sinner, upon account of impotence, and who, being p-xed by her former spouse, has got the gout in her decrepit age, which makes her hobble so damnably?’¹⁴

No less peremptory is the censure of our hyper-critical historian,

MR. OLDMIXON.

‘I dare not say any thing of the Essay on Criticism, in verse; but if any more curious reader has discovered in it something new, which is not in Dryden’s Prefaces, Dedications, and his Essay on Dramatic Poetry, not to mention the French critics, I should be very glad to have the benefit of the discovery.' ¹⁵

He is followed (as in fame, so in judgment) by the modest and simple-minded

MR. LEONARD WELSTED,

who, out of great respect to our poet, not naming him, doth yet glance at his Essay, together with the Duke of Buckingham's, and the criticisms of Dryden, and of Horace, which he more openly taxeth: ¹⁶ 'As to the numerous treatises, essays, arts, &c. both in verse and prose, that have been written by the moderns on this groundwork, they do but hackney the same thoughts over again, making them still more trite. Most of their pieces are nothing but a pert insipid heap of commonplace. Horace has, even in his Art of Poetry, thrown out several things which plainly show he thought an Art of Poetry was of no use, even while he was writing one.'

To all which great authorities we can only oppose that of

MR. ADDISON.

¹⁷ 'The Art of Criticism,' saith he, 'which was published some months since, is a masterpiece in its kind. The observations follow one another like those in Horace's Art of Poetry, without that methodical regularity which would have been requisite in a prose writer. They are some of them uncommon, but such as the reader must assent to, when he sees them explained with that ease and perspicuity in which they are delivered. As for those which are the most known, and the most received, they are placed in so beautiful a light, and illustrated with such apt allusions, that they have in them all the graces of novelty, and make the reader, who was before acquainted with them, still more convinced of their truth and solidity. And here give me leave to mention what Mons. Boileau has so well enlarged upon in the Preface to his Works; that wit and fine writing doth not consist so much in advancing things that are new, as in giving things that are known an agreeable turn. It is impossible for us, who live in the latter ages of the world, to make observations in criticism, morality, or any art or science, which have not been touched upon by others; we have little else left us but to represent the common sense of mankind in more strong, more beautiful, or more uncommon lights. If a reader examines Horace's Art of Poetry, he will find but few precepts in it which he may not meet with in Aristotle, and which were not commonly known by all the poets of the Augustan age. His way of expressing and applying them, not his invention of them, is what we are chiefly to admire.

‘Longinus, in his Reflexions, has given us the same kind of sublime, which he observes in the several passages that occasioned them: I cannot but take notice that our English Author has, after the same manner, exemplified several of the precepts in the very precepts themselves.' He then produces some instances of a particular beauty in the numbers, and concludes with saying, that 'There are three poems in our tongue of the same nature, and each a masterpiece in its kind; the Essay on Translated Verse, the Essay on the Art of Poetry, and the Essay on Criticism.'

Of Windsor Forest, positive is the judgment of the affirmative

MR. JOHN DENNIS.

¹⁸ 'That it is a wretched rhapsody, impudently writ in emulation of the Cooper's Hill of Sir John Denham: the author of it is obscure, is ambiguous, is affected, is temerarious, is barbarous.'

But the author of the Dispensary, in the Preface to his poem of Claremont,¹⁹ differs from this opinion: 'Those who have seen these two excellent poems of Cooper's Hill and Windsor Forest, the one written by Sir John Denham, the other by Mr. Pope, will show a great deal of candour if they approve of this.'

DR. GARTH,

obscure writer of a poem called Sawney, 'That because Prior's Henry and Emma charmed the finest tastes, our author writ his Eloise in opposition to it, but forgot innocence and virtue: if you take away her tender thoughts, and her fierce desires, all the rest is of no value.' In which, methinks, his judgment resembles that of a French tailor on a villa and gardens by the Thames: 'All this is very fine; but take away the river, and it is good for nothing.'

But very contrary hereunto was the opinion of himself, saying, in his Alma,²⁰

MR. PRIOR

'O Abelard! ill fated youth,
Thy tale will justify this truth.
But well I weet thy cruel wrong
Adorns a nobler poet's song:
Dan Pope, for thy misfortune griev'd,
With kind concern and skill has weav'd
A silken web; and ne'er shall fade
Its colours: gently has he laid
The mantle o'er thy sad distress,
And Venus shall the texture bless,' &c.

who (though otherwise a severe censurer of our author) yet styleth this 'a laudable translation.'²¹

²⁰ Alma, canto 2.

²¹ In his Essays, vol. i., printed for E. Curll.

That ready writer,

MR. OLDMIXON,

in his forementioned Essay, frequently commends the same. And the painful

MR. LEWIS THEOBALD

thus extols it:²² ‘The spirit of Homer breathes all through this translation.—I am in doubt whether I should most admire the justness to the original, or the force and beauty of the language, or the sounding variety of the numbers; but when I find all these meet, it puts me in mind of what the poet says of one of his heroes, that he alone raised and flung with ease a weighty stone that two common men could not lift from the ground; just so one single person has performed, in this translation, what I once despaired to have seen done by the force of several masterly hands.’ Indeed the same gentleman appears to have changed his sentiment in his Essay on the Art of Sinking in Reputation (printed in MIST’S JOURNAL, March 30, 1728), where he says thus: ‘In order to sink in reputation, let him take it into his head to descend into Homer (let the world wonder, as it will, how the devil he got there), and pretend to do him into English, so his version denotes his neglect of the manner how.’ Strange variation! We are told in

MIST’S JOURNAL, JUNE 8,

‘That this translation of the Iliad was not in all respects conformable to the fine taste of his friend Mr. Addison; insomuch that he employed a younger muse in an undertaking of this kind, which he supervised himself.' Whether Mr. Addison did find it conformable to his taste or not, best appears from his own testimony the year following its publication, in these words :

MR. ADDISON, FREEHOLDER, NO. 40.

'When I consider myself as a British freeholder, I am in a particular manner pleased with the labours of those who have improved our language with the translations of old Greek and Latin authors. We have already most of their historians in our own tongue, and what is more for the honour of our language, it hath been taught to express with elegance the greatest of their poets in each nation. The illiterate among our own countrymen may learn to judge from Dryden's Virgil of the most perfect epic performance; and those parts of Homer which have been published already by Mr. Pope, give us reason to think that the Iliad will appear in English with as little disadvantage to that immortal poem.'

As to the rest, there is a slight mistake; for this younger muse was an elder: nor was the gentleman (who is a friend of our author) employed by Mr. Addison to translate it after him, since he saith himself that he did it before.²³ Contrariwise, ²³ Vide Preface to Mr. Tickell's translation of the First Book of the Iliad, 4to.

that Mr. Addison engaged our author in this work, appeareth by declaration thereof in the Preface to the Iliad, printed some time before his death, and by his own letters of October 26, and November 2, 1713, where he declares it as his opinion, that no other person was equal to it.

Next comes his Shakspeare on the stage:

Let him (quoth one, whom I take to be

MR. THEOBALD, MIST'S JOURNAL, JUNE 8, 1728,) publish such an author as he has least studied, and forget to discharge even the dull duty of an editor. In this project let him lend the bookseller his name (for a competent sum of money) to promote the credit of an exorbitant subscription.' Gentle reader, be pleased to cast thine eye on the proposal below quoted, and on what follows (some months after the former assertion) in the same Journalist of June 8: 'The bookseller proposed the book by subscription, and raised some thousands of pounds for the same: I believe the gentleman did not share in the profits of this extravagant subscription.'

'After the Iliad, he undertook (saith

MIST'S JOURNAL, JUNE 8, 1728,)

the sequel of that work, the Odyssey; and having secured the success by a numerous subscription, he employed some underlings to perform what, according to his proposals, should come from his own hands.' To which heavy charge we can, in truth oppose nothing but the words of

MR. POPE'S PROPOSAL FOR THE ODYSSEY,

(Printed for J. Watts, Jan. 10, 1724.)

I take this occasion to declare, that the subscription for Shakspeare belongs wholly to Mr. Tonson: and that the benefit of this proposal is not solely for my own use, but for that of two of my friends, who have assisted me in this work.' But these very gentlemen are extolled above our poet himself in another of MIST'S JOURNALS, March 30, 1728, saying, 'That he would not advise Mr. Pope to try the experiment again of getting a great part of a book done by assistants, lest those extraneous parts should unhappily ascend to the sublime, and retard the declension of the whole.' Behold! these underlings are become good writers!

If any say, that before the said proposals were printed, the subscription was begun, without declaration of such assistance; verily those who set it on foot, or (as the term is) secured it, to wit, the Right Honourable the Lord Viscount Harcourt, were he living, would testify, and the Right Honourable the Lord Bathurst, now living, doth testify, the same is a falsehood.

Sorry I am that persons professing to be learned, or of whatever rank of authors, should either falsely tax, or be falsely taxed. Yet let us, who are only reporters, be impartial in our citations, and proceed.

‘Mr. Addison raised this author from obscurity, obtained him the acquaintance and friendship of the whole body of our nobility, and transferred his powerful interest with those great men to this rising bard, who frequently levied, by that means, unusual contributions on the public.’ Which surely cannot be, if, as the author of the Dunciad Dissected reporteth, ‘Mr. Wycherley had before introduced him into a familiar acquaintance with the great peers and brightest wits then living.’

‘No sooner (saith the same Journalist) was his body lifeless, but this author, reviving his resentment, libelled the memory of his departed friend; and, what was still more heinous, made the scandal public.’ Grievous the accusation! unknown the accuser! the person accused no witness in his own cause; the person, in whose regard accused, dead! But if there be living any one nobleman whose friendship, yea, any one gentleman whose subscription Mr. Addison procured to our author, let him stand forth, that truth may appear! Amicus Plato, amicus Socrates, sed magis amica veritas. In verity, the whole story of the libel is a lie; witness those persons of integrity who, several years before Mr. Addison’s decease, did see and approve of the said verses, in no wise a libel, but a friendly rebuke, sent privately, in our author’s own hand, to Mr. Addison himself, and never made public, till after their own Journals and Curll had printed he same. One name alone, which I am here authorized to declare, will sufficiently evince this truth, that of the Right Honourable the Earl of Burlington.

Next is he taxed with a crime (in the opinion of some authors, I doubt, more heinous than any in morality), to wit, plagiarism, from the inventive and quaint conceited

JAMES MOORE SMITH, GENT.

²⁴ ‘Upon reading the third volume of Pope’s Miscellanies, I found five lines which I thought excellent; and happening to praise them, a gentleman produced a modern comedy (the Rival Modes) published last year, where were the same verses to a tittle.

‘These gentlemen are undoubtedly the first plagiaries, that pretend to make a reputation by stealing from a man’s works in his own lifetime, and out of a public print.’ Let us join to this what is written by the author of the Rival Modes, the said Mr. James Moore Smith, in a letter to our author himself, who had informed him, a month before that play was acted, Jan. 27, 1726-7, ‘That these verses, which he had before given him leave to insert in it, would be known for his, some copies being got abroad.’ He desires, nevertheless, that ‘since the lines had been read in his comedy to several, Mr. P. would not deprive it of them,’ &c. Surely if we add the testimonies of the Lord Bolingbroke, of the lady to whom the said verses were originally addressed, of Hugh Bethel, Esq. and others, who knew them as our author's long before the said gentleman composed his play, it is hoped the ingenuous, that affect not error, will rectify their opinion by the suffrage of such honourable personages.

And yet followeth another charge, insinuating no less than his enmity both to Church and State, which could come from no other informer than the said

MR. JAMES MOORE SMITH.

²⁵ 'The Memoirs of a Parish Clerk was a very dull and unjust abuse of a person who wrote in defence of our religion and constitution, and who has been dead many years.' This seemeth also most untrue, it being known to divers that these Memoirs were written at the seat of the Lord Harcourt, in Oxfordshire, before that excellent person's (Bishop Burnet) death, and many years before the appearance of that history, of which they are pretended to be an abuse. Most true it is that Mr. Moore had such a design, and was himself the man who pressed Dr. Arbuthnot and Mr. Pope to assist him therein; and that he borrowed those Memoirs of our author, when that history came forth, with intent to turn them to such abuse; but being able to obtain from our author but one single hint, and either changing his mind, or having more mind than ability, he contented himself to keep the said Memoirs, and read them as his own to all his acquaintance. A noble person there is into whose company Mr. Pope once chanced to introduce him, who well remembereth the conversation of Mr. Moore to have turned upon the 'contempt he had for the work of that reverend prelate, and how full he was of a design he declared himself to have of exposing it.' This noble person is the Earl of Peterborough.

Here, in truth, should we crave pardon of all the aforesaid right honourable and worthy personages, for having mentioned them in the same page with such weekly riff-raff railers and rhymers, but that we had their ever-honoured commands for the same; and that they are introduced not as witnesses in the controversy, but as witnesses that cannot be controverted; not to dispute, but to decide.

Certain it is, that dividing our writers into two classes, of such who were acquaintance, and of such who were strangers, to our author; the former are those who speak well, and the other those who speak evil of him. Of the first class, the most noble

The witty and moral satirist,

MR. JOHN DENNIS ;

who, in his Reflections on the Essay on Criticism, thus describeth him : ‘ A little affected hypocrite, who has nothing in his mouth but candour, truth, friendship, goodnature, humanity, and magnanimity. He is so great a lover of falsehood, that whenever he has a mind to calumniate his contemporaries, he brands them with some defect which is just contrary to some good quality for which all their friends and their acquaintance commend them. He seems to have a particular pique to people of quality, and authors of that rank. He must derive his religion from St. Omer’s.’ —But in the Character of Mr. P. and his writings (printed by S. Popping, 1716), he saith, ‘ though he is a professor of the worst religion, yet he laughs at it ;’ ‘ but that, nevertheless, he is a virulent Papist ; and yet a pillar for the Church of England.’ Of both which opinions seems also to be ; declaring, in MIST’S JOURNAL of June 22, 1718, ‘ that, if he is not shrewdly abused, he made it his business to cackle to both parties in their own sentiments.’ But as to his pique against people of quality, the same Journalist doth not agree, but saith (May 8, 1828),

MR. LEWIS THEOBALD

He had, by some means or other, the acquaintance and friendship of the whole body of our nobility.'

However contradictory this may appear, Mr. Dennis and Gildon, in the character last cited, make it all plain, by assuring us, 'that he is a creature that reconciles all contradictions: he is a beast, and a man; a Whig and a Tory; a writer (at one and the same time) of Guardians and Examiners; ⁸¹ an assertor of liberty, and of the dispensing power of kings; a Jesuitical professor of truth; a base and a foul pretender to candour.' So that upon the whole account, we must conclude him either to have been a great hypocrite, or a very honest man; a terrible imposer upon both parties, or very moderate to either.

Be it as to the judicious reader shall seem good. Sure it is, he is little favoured of certain authors whose wrath is perilous: for one declares he ought to have a price set on his head, and to be hunted down as a wild beast: ⁸² another protests that he does not know what may happen; advises him to insure his person; says he has bitter enemies, and expressly declares it will be well if he escapes with his life. ⁸³ One desires he would cut his own throat, or hang himself. ⁸⁴ But Pasquin seemed rather inclined it should be done by the government, representing him engaged in grievous designs with a Lord of Parliament then under prosecution.⁸⁵ Mr. Dennis himself hath written to a minister, that he is one of the most dangerous persons in this kingdom;⁸⁶ and assureth the public that he is an open and mortal enemy to his country; a monster that will, one day, show as daring a soul as a mad Indian, who runs a-muck to kill the first Christian he meets.⁸⁷ Another gives information of treason discovered in his poem.⁸⁸ Mr. Curll boldly supplies an imperfect verse with kings and princesses;⁸⁹ and one Matthew Concanen, yet more impudent, publishes at length the two most sacred names in this nation as members of the Dunciad!⁴⁰

This is prodigious! yet it is almost as strange that, in the midst of these invectives, his greatest enemies have (I know not how) borne testimony to some merit in him.

MR. CHARLES GILDON,

after having violently attacked him in many pieces, at last came to wish from his heart, 'that Mr. Pope would be prevailed upon to give us Ovid's Epistles by his hand; for it is certain we see the original of Sappho to Phaon with much more life and likeness in his version than in that of Sir Car Scrope. And this (he adds) is the more to be wished, because in the English tongue we have scarce any thing truly and naturally written upon Love.'⁴² He also, in taxing Sir Richard Blackmore for his heterodox opinions of Homer, challenges him to answer what Mr. Pope hath said in his preface to that poet.

MR. OLDMIXON

calls him a great master of our tongue; declares 'the purity and perfection of the English language to be found in his Homer; and, saying there are more good verses in Dryden's Virgil than in any other work, excepts this of our author only.'⁴³

THE AUTHOR OF A LETTER TO MR. CIBBER says,⁴⁴ 'Pope was so good a versifier [once] that his predecessor, Mr. Dryden, and his contemporary, Mr. Prior, excepted, the harmony of his numbers is equal to any body's;' and that he had all the merit that a man can have that way. And after much blemishing our author's Homer, crieth out,

And bade them live to brighten future days.'⁴⁵

So also one who takes the name of

H. STANHOPE,

the maker of certain verses to Duncan Campbell, in that poem,⁴⁶ which is wholly a satire on Mr. Pope, confesseth,

'Tis true, if finest notes alone could show

Pope more than we can offer should receive:
For when some gliding river is his theme,
His lines run smoother than the smoothest stream,' &c.

words: 'the author is allowed to be a perfect master of an easy and elegant versification. In all his works we find the most happy turns, and natural similes, wonderfully short and thick sown.'

The Essay on the Dunciad also owns, p. 25, it is very full of beautiful images. But the panegyric, which crowns all that can be said on this poem, is bestowed by our Laureate, who 'grants it to be a better poem of its kind than ever was writ:' but adds, 'it was a victory over a parcel of poor wretches, whom it was almost cowardice to conquer: a man might as well triumph for having killed so many silly flies that offended him. Could he have let them alone, by this time, poor souls! they had all been buried in oblivion.'⁴⁷ Here we see our excellent Laureate allows the justice of the satire on every man in it but himself, as the great Mr. Dennis did before him.

MR. COLLEY CIBBER,

The said

MR. DENNIS AND MR. GILDON,

in the most furious of all their works (the fore-cited Character, p. 5) do in concert⁴⁸ confess, 'that some men of good understanding value him for his rhymes.' And (p. 17) 'That he has ⁴⁷ Cibber's Letter to Mr. Pope, pp. 9, 12.

⁴⁸ Hear how Mr. Dennis hath proved our mistake in this place: 'As to my writing in concert with Mr. Gildon, I declare upon the honour and word of a gentleman, that I got, like Mr. Bays in the Rehearsal (that is, like Mr. Dryden), a notable knack at rhyming, and writing smooth verse.'

Of his Essay on Man, numerous were the praises bestowed by his avowed enemies, in the imagination that the same was not written by him, as it was printed anonymously.

Thus sang of it even

BEZALEEL MORRIS.

'Auspicious bard! while all admire thy strain,
All but the selfish, ignorant, and vain.
I, whom no bribe to servile flattery drew,
Must pay the tribute to thy merit due:
Thy Muse sublime, significant, and clear,
Alike informs the soul, and charms the ear.'

never wrote so much as one line in concert with any one man whatsoever; and these two letters from Gildon will plainly show that we are not writers in concert with each other.

Sir.

—The height of my ambition is to please men of the best judgment; and finding that I have entertained my master agreeably, I have the extent of the reward of my labour.

Sir.

I had not the opportunity of hearing of your excellent pamphlet till this day. I am infinitely satisfied and pleased with it, and hope you will meet with that encouragement your admirable performance deserves, &c.

CH. GILDON.

'Now is it not plain that any one who sends such compliments to another, has not been used to write in partnership with him to whom he sends them?' Dennis, Remarks on the Dunciad, p. 50. Mr. Dennis is therefore welcome to take this piece to himself.

And

thus wrote⁴⁹ to the unknown author on the first publication of the said Essay: 'I must own, after the reception which the vilest and most immoral ribaldry hath lately met with, I was surprised to see what I had long despaired, a performancee deserving the name of a poet. Such, sir, is your work. It is, indeed, above all commendation, and ought to have been published in an age and country more worthy of it. If my testimony be of weight any where, you are sure to have it in the amplest manner,' &c. &c. &c.

Thus we see every one of his works hath been extolled by one or other of his most inveterate enemies; and to the success of them all they do unanimously give testimony. But it is sufficient, instar omnium, to behold the great critic, Mr. Dennis, sorely lamenting it, even from the Essay on Criticism to this day of the Dunciad! 'A most notorious instance (quoth he) of the depravity of genius and taste, the approbation this Essay meets with.⁵⁰—I can safely affirm, that I never attacked any of these writings, unless they had success infinitely beyond their merit.—This, though an empty, has been a popular scribbler. The epidemic madness of the times has given him reputation.⁵¹—If, after the cruel treatment so many extraordinary men (Spenser, Lord Bacon, Ben Jonson, Milton, Butler, Otway, and others) have received from this country for these last hundred years, I should shift the scene, and show all that penury changed at once to riot and profuseness, and more squandered away upon one object than would have satisfied the greater part of those extraordinary men; the reader, to whom this one creature should be unknown, would fancy him a prodigy of art and nature; would believe that all the great qualities of these persons were centred in him alone.—But if I should venture to assure him that the people of England had made such a choice, the reader would either believe me a malicious enemy and slanderer, or that the reign of the last (Queen Anne's) ministry was designed by fate to encourage fools.⁵²

But it happens that this our poet never had any place, pension, or gratuity, in any shape, from the said glorious queen, or any of her ministers. All he owed, in the whole course of his life, to any court, was a subscription for his Homer, of 200*l.* from King George I. and 100*l.* from the Prince and Princess.

However, lest we imagine our author's success was constant and universal, they acquaint us of certain works in a less degree of repute, whereof, although owned by others, yet do they assure us he is the writer. Of this sort Mr. Dennis⁵³ ascribes to him two Farces, whose names he does not tell, but assures us that there is not one jest in them; and an imitation of Horace, whose title he does not mention, but assures us it is much more execrable than all his works.⁵⁴ The DAILY JOURNAL, May 11, 1728, assures us, 'He is below Tom Durfey in the drama; because (as that writer thinks) the Marriage-Hater Matched and the Boarding School are better than the What-d'ye-call it;' which is not Mr. P's, but Mr. Gay's. Mr. Gildon assures us, in his New Rehearsal, p. 48, 'that he was writing a play of the Lady Jane Gray;' but it afterwards proved to be Mr. Rowe's. We are assured by another, 'He wrote a pamphlet called Dr. Andrew Tripe;' ⁵⁵ which proved to be one Dr. Wagstaff's. Mr. Theobald assures us, in MIST of the 27th of April, 'That the treatise of the Profound is very dull, and that Mr. Pope is the author of it.' The writer of Gulliveriana is of another opinion; and says, 'the whole, or greatest part, of the merit of this treatise must and can only be ascribed to Gulliver.'⁵⁶ [Here, gentle reader! cannot I but smile at the strange blindness and positiveness of men, knowing the said treatise to appertain to none other but to me, Martinus Scriblerus.]

We are assured, in MIST of June 8, 'That his own plays and farces would better have adorned the Dunciad than those of Mr. Theobald; for he had neither genius for tragedy nor comedy.' Which, whether true or not, it is not easy to judge, inasmuch as he had attempted neither; unless we will take it for granted, with Mr. Cibber, that his being once very angry at hearing a friend's play abused, was an infallible proof the play was his own; the said Mr. Cibber thinking it impossible for a man to be much concerned for any but himself: 'Now let any man judge (saith he) by this concern, who was the true mother of the child?'⁵⁷

But from all that hath been said, the discerning reader will recollect, that it little availed our author to have any candour, since, when he declared he did not write for others, it was not credited; as little to have any modesty, since, when he declined writing in any way himself, the presumption of others was imputed to him. If he singly enterprised one great work, he was taxed of boldness and madness to a prodigy:⁵⁸ if he took assistants in another, it was complained of, and represented as a great injury to the public.⁵⁹ The loftiest heroics, the lowest ballads, treatises against the state or church, satires on lords and ladies, raillery on wits and authors, squabbles with booksellers, and even full and true accounts of monsters, poisons, and murders ; of any hereof was there nothing so good, nothing so bad, which had not, at one or other season, been to him ascribed. If it bore no author's name, then lay he concealed ; if it did, he fathered it upon that author to be yet better concealed : if it resembled any of his styles, then was it evident ; if it did not, then disguised he it on set purpose. Yea, even direct oppositions in religion, principles, and politics, have equally been supposed in him inherent. Surely a most rare and singular character ! of which let the reader make what he can.

Doubtless most commentators would hence take occasion to turn all to their author's advantage, and, from the testimony of his very enemies, would affirm that his capacity was boundless as well as his imagination ; that he was a perfect master of all styles, and all arguments ; and that there was in those times no other writer, in any kind, of any degree of excellence, save he himself. But as this is not our own sentiment, we shall determine on nothing ; but leave thee, gentle reader, to steer thy judgment equally between various opinions, and to choose whether thou wilt incline to the testimonies of authors avowed, or of authors concealed ; of those who knew him, or of those who knew him not.

MARTINUS SCRIBLERUS OF THE POEM.

THIS poem, as it celebrateth the most grave and ancient of things, Chaos, Night, and Dulness, so is it of the most grave and ancient kind. Homer (saith Aristotle) was the first who gave the form, and (saith Horace) who adapted the measure, to heroic poesy. But even before this may be rationally presumed, from what the ancients have left written, was a piece by Homer, composed of like nature and matter with this of our poet; for of epic sort it appeareth to have been, yet of matter surely not unpleasant; witness what is reported of it by the learned Archbishop Eustathius, in Odyssey X. And accordingly Aristotle, in his Poetic, chap. iv., doth further set forth, that as the Iliad and Odyssey gave an example to tragedy, so did this poem to comedy its first idea.

From these authors also it should seem that the hero, or chief personage of it, was no less obscure, and his understanding and sentiments no less quaint and strange (if indeed not more so) than any of the actors of our poem. Margites was the name of this personage, whom antiquity recordeth to have been Dunce the first; and surely, from what we hear of him, not unworthy to be the root of so spreading a tree, and so numerous a posterity. The poem, therefore, celebrating him, was properly and absolutely a Dunciad ; which though now unhappily lost, yet is its nature sufficiently known by the infallible tokens aforesaid. And thus it doth appear that the first Dunciad was the first epic poem, written by Homer himself, and anterior even to the Iliad or Odyssey.

Now, forasmuch as our poet hath translated those two famous works of Homer which are yet left, he did conceive it in some sort his duty to imitate that also which was lost ; and was therefore induced to bestow on it the same form which Homer's is reported to have had, namely, that of epic poem ; with a title also framed after the ancient Greek manner, to wit, that of Dunciad.

Wonderful it is that so few of the moderns have been stimulated to attempt some Dunciad ; since, in the opinion of the multitude, it might cost less pain and toil than an imitation of the greater epic. But possible it is also that, on due reflection, the maker might find it easier to paint a Charlemagne, a Brute, or a Godfrey, with just pomp and dignity heroic, than a Margites, a Codrus, or a Fleckno.

We shall next declare the occasion and the cause which moved our poet to this particular work. He lived in those days when (after Providence had permitted the invention of printing as a scourge for the sins of the learned) paper also became so cheap, and printers so numerous, that a deluge of authors covered the land : whereby not only the peace of the honest unwriting subject was daily molested, but unmerciful demands were made of his applause, yea, of his money, by such as would neither earn the one nor deserve the other. At the same time the license of the press was such, that it grew dangerous to refuse them either; for they would forthwith publish slanders unpunished, the authors being anonymous, and skulking under the wings of publishers, a set of men who never scrupled to vend either calumny or blasphemy, as long as the town would call for it.

¹ Now our author, living in those times, did conceive it an endeavour well worthy an honest satirist, to dissuade the dull, and punish the wicked, the only way that was left. In that public-spirited view he laid the plan of this poem, as the greatest service he was capable (without much hurt, or being slain) to render his dear country. First, taking things from their original, he considereth the causes creative of such authors, namely, dulness and poverty; the one born with them, the other contracted by neglect of their proper talents, through self-conceit of greater abilities. This truth he wrappeth in an allegory ² (as the construction of epic poesy requireth), and feigns that one of these goddesses had taken up her abode with the other, and that they jointly inspired all such writers and such works.³ He proceedeth to show the qualities they bestow on these authors, and the effects they produce;⁴ then the materials, or stock, with which they furnish them;⁵ and (above all) that self-opinion⁶ which causeth it to seem to themselves vastly greater than it is, and is the prime motive of their setting up in this sad and sorry merchandise. The great power of these goddesses acting in alliance (whereof as the one is the mother of industry, so is the other of plodding) was to be exemplified in some one great and remarkable action;⁷ and none could be more so than that which our poet hath chosen, viz. the restoration of the reign of Chaos and Night, by the ministry of Dulness their daughter, in the removal of her imperial seat from the city to the polite world; as the action of the Æneid is the restoration of the empire of Troy, by the removal of the race from thence to Latium. But as Homer, singing only the wrath of Achilles, yet includes in his poem the whole history of the Trojan war; in like manner, our author has drawn into this single action the whole history of Dulness and her children.

A person must next be fixed upon to support this action. This phantom, in the poet's mind, must have a name.⁸ He finds it to be —; and he becomes of course the hero of the poem.

⁸ Bossu, chap. viii. Vide Aristot. Poetic. cap. ix.

The fable being thus, according to the best example, one and entire, as contained in the proposition; the machinery is a continued chain of allegories, setting forth the whole power, ministry, and empire of Dulness, extended through her subordinate instruments, in all her various operations.

This is branched into episodes, each of which hath its moral apart, though all conducive to the main end. The crowd assembled in the second Book demonstrates the design to be more extensive than to bad poets only, and that we may expect other episodes of the patrons, encouragers, or paymasters of such authors, as occasion shall bring them forth. And the third Book, if well considered, seemeth to embrace the whole world. Each of the games relateth to some or other vile class of writers. The first concerneth the plagiarist, to whom he giveth the name of Moore; the second the libellous novelist, whom he styleth Eliza; the third, the flattering dedicator; the fourth, the bawling critic, or noisy poet; the fifth, the dark and dirty party-writer; and so of the rest; assigning to each some proper name or other, such as he could find.

As for the characters, the public hath already acknowledged how justly they are drawn. The manners are so depicted, and the sentiments so peculiar to those to whom applied, that surely to transfer them to any other or wiser personages would be exceeding difficult; and certain it is that every person concerned, being consulted apart, hath readily owned the resemblance of every portrait, his own excepted. So Mr. Cibber calls them 'a parcel of poor wretches, so many silly flies;'⁹ but adds, 'our author's wit is remarkably more bare and barren whenever it would fall foul on Cibber than upon any other person whatever.'

The descriptions are singular, the comparisons very quaint, the narrations various, yet of one colour, the purity and chastity of diction is so preserved, that in the places most suspicious, not the words, but only the images, have been censured; and yet are those images no other than have been sanctified by ancient and classical authority (though, as was the manner of those good times, not so curiously wrapped up), yea, and commented upon by the most grave doctors and approved critics.

As it beareth the name of epic, it is thereby subjected to such severe indispensable rules as are laid on all neoterics, a strict imitation of the ancients; insomuch that any deviation, accompanied with whatever poetic beauties, hath always been censured by the sound critic. How exact that imitation hath been in this piece, appeareth not only by its general structure, but by particular allusions infinite, many whereof have escaped both the commentator and poet himself; yea divers, by his exceeding diligence, are so altered and interwoven with the rest, that several have already been, and more will be, by the ignorant abused, as altogether and originally his own.

In a word, the whole poem proveth itself to be the work of our author, when his faculties were in full vigour and perfection; at that exact time when years have ripened the judgment without diminishing the imagination; which, by good critics, is held to be punctually at forty: for at that season it was that Virgil finished his Georgics; and Sir Richard Blackmore, at the like age composing his Arthurs, declared the same to be the very acme and pitch of life for epic poesy; though, since, he hath altered it to sixty, the year in which he published his Alfred.¹⁰ True it is that the talents for criticism, namely, smartness, quick censure, vivacity of remark, certainty of asseveration, indeed all but acerbity, seem rather the gifts of youth than of riper age: but it is far otherwise in poetry; witness the works of Mr. Rymer and Mr. Dennis, who, beginning with criticism, became afterwards such poets as no age hath paralleled. With good reason, therefore, did our author choose to write his Essay on that subject at twenty, and reserve for his maturer years this great and wonderful work of THE DUNCIAD.

RICARDUS ARISTARCHUS OF THE HERO OF THE POEM.

OF the nature of the Dunciad in general, whence derived, and on what authority founded, as well as of the art and conduct of this our poem in particular, the learned and laborious Scriblerus hath, according to his manner, and with tolerable share of judgment, dissertated; but when he cometh to speak of the person of the hero fitted for such poem, in truth he miserably halts and hallucinates: for, misled by one Monsieur Bossu, a Gallic critic, he prateth of I cannot tell what phantom of a hero, only raised up to support the fable. A putid conceit! as if Homer and Virgil, like modern undertakers, who first build their house, and then seek out for a tenant, had contrived the story of a war and a wandering before they once thought either of Achilles or Æneas. We shall therefore set our good brother, and the world also, right in this particular, by assuring them that, in the greater epic, the prime intention of the muse is to exalt heroic virtue, in order to propagate the love of it among the children of men; and, consequently, that the poet's first thought must needs be turned upon a real subject meet for laud and celebration; not one whom he is to make, but one whom he may find truly illustrious. This is the primum mobile of his poetic world, whence every thing is to receive life and motion: for this subject being found, he is immediately ordained, or rather acknowledged, a hero, and put upon such action as befitteth the dignity of his character.

But the muse ceaseth not here her eagle flight: for sometimes, satiated with the contemplation of these suns of glory, she turneth downward on her wing, and darts with Jove's lightning on the goose and serpent kind. For we apply to the muse, in her various moods, what an ancient master of wisdom affirmeth of the gods in general: 'Si Dii non irascuntur impiis et injustis, nec pios utique justosque diligunt. In rebus enim diversis, aut in utramque partem moveri necesse est, aut in neutram. Itaque qui bonos diligit, et malos odit; et qui malos non odit, nec bonos diligit. Quia et diligere bonos ex odio malorum venit; et malos odisse ex bonorum caritate descendit.' Which, in our vernacular idiom, may be thus interpreted: 'If the gods be not provoked at evil men, neither are they delighted with the good and just; for contrary objects must either excite contrary affections or no affections at all. So that he who loveth good men must at the same time hate the bad; and he who hateth not bad men cannot love the good; because to love good men proceedeth from an aversion to evil, and to hate evil men from a tenderness to the good.' From this delicacy of the muse arose the little epic (more lively and choleric than her elder sister, whose bulk and complexion incline her to the phlegmatic), and for this some notorious vehicle of vice and folly was sought out to make thereof an example; an early instance of which (nor could it escape the accurate Scriblerus) the father himself of epic poem affordeth us. From him the practice descended to the Greek dramatic poets, his offspring; who, in the composition of their tetralogy, or set of four pieces, were wont to make the last a satiric tragedy. Happily one of these ancient Dunciads (as we may well term it) is come down unto us, amongst the tragedies of the poet Euripides; and what doth the reader suppose may be the subject thereof? Why, in truth, and it is worthy observation, the unequal contest of an old, dull, debauched buffoon, Cyclops, with the heaven-directed favourite of Minerva: who, after having quietly borne all the monster's obscene and impious ribaldry, endeth the farce in punishing him with the mark of an indelible brand in his forehead. May we not then be excused if, for the future, we consider the epics of Homer, Virgil, and Milton, together with this our poem, as a complete tetralogy, in which the last worthily holdeth the place or station of the satiric piece?

Proceed we therefore in our subject. It hath been long, and alas for pity! still remaineth a question, whether the hero of the greater epic should be an honest man ; or, as the French critics express it, un honnête homme:¹ but it never admitted of any doubt but that the hero of the little epic should be his very opposite. Hence, to the advantage of our Dunciad, we may observe how much juster the moral of that poem must needs be where so important a question is previously decided.

But then it is not every knave, nor (let me add) every fool, that is a fit subject for a Dunciad. There must still exist some analogy, if not resemblance, of qualities between the heroes of the two poems ; and this, in order to admit what neoteric critics call the parody, one of the liveliest graces of the little epic. Thus it being agreed that the constituent qualities of the greater epic hero are wisdom, bravery, and love, from whence springeth heroic virtue : it followeth that those of the lesser epic hero should be vanity, assurance, and debauchery : from which happy assemblage resulteth heroic dulness, the never-dying subject of this our poem.

This being settled, come we now to particulars. It is the character of true wisdom to seek its chief support and confidence within itself, and to place that support in the resources which proceed from a conscious rectitude of will.—And are the advantages of vanity, when arising to the heroic standard, at all short of this self-complacence? nay, are they not, in the opinion of the enamoured owner, far beyond it? ‘Let the world (will such a one say) impute to me what folly or weakness they please; but till wisdom can give me something that will make me more heartily happy, I am content to be gazed at.’² This, we see, is vanity, according to the heroic gage or measure: not that low and ignoble species which pretendeth to virtues we have not; but the laudable ambition of being gazed at for glorying in those vices which every body knows we have. ‘The world may ask (says he) why I make my follies public? Why not? I have passed my time very pleasantly with them.’³ In short, there is no sort of vanity such a hero would scruple, but that which might go near to degrade him from his high station in this our Dunciad; namely, ‘Whether it would not be vanity in him to take shame to himself for not being a wise man?’⁴

Bravery, the second attribute of the true hero, is courage manifesting itself in every limb; while its correspondent virtue in the mock hero is that same courage all collected into the face; and as power, when drawn together, must needs have more force and spirit than when dispersed, we generally find this kind of courage in so high and heroic a degree, that it insults not only men, but gods. Mezentius is, without doubt, the bravest character in all the Æneis: but how? His bravery, we know, was a high courage of blasphemy. And can we say less of this brave man's? who, having told us that he placed 'his summum bonum in those follies which he was not content barely to possess, but would likewise glory in,' adds, 'If I am misguided, 'tis Nature's fault, and I follow her.'⁶ Nor can we be mistaken in making this happy quality a species of courage, when we consider those illustrious marks of it which made his face 'more known (as he justly boasteth) than most in the kingdom;' and his language to consist of what we must allow to be the most daring figure of speech, that which is taken from the name of God.

Gentle love, the next ingredient in the true hero's composition, is a mere bird of passage, or (as Shakspeare calls it) 'summer-teeming lust,' and evaporates in the heat of youth; doubtless by that refinement it suffers in passing through those certain strainers which our poet somewhere speaketh of;⁶ but when it is let alone to work upon the lees, it acquireth strength by old age, and becometh a lasting ornament to the little epic. It is true, indeed, there is one objection to its

⁶ Lust, through some certain strainers well refin'd, fitness for such a use; for not only the ignorant may think it common, but it is admitted to be so even by him who best knoweth its value. 'Don't you think (argueth he) to say only a man has his whore,⁷ ought to go for little or nothing? Because, defendit numerus: take the first ten thousand men you meet, and, I believe, you would be no loser if you betted ten to one that every single sinner of them, one with another, had been guilty of the same frailty.'⁸ But here he seemeth not to have done justice to himself: the man is sure enough a hero who hath his lady at fourscore. How doth his modesty herein lessen the merit of a whole well-spent life! not taking to himself the commendation (which Horace accounted the greatest in a theatrical character) of continuing to the very dregs the same he was from the beginning,

'—— Servetur ad imum

Qualis ab incepto processerat.' ——

But here, in justice both to the poet and the hero, let us farther remark, that the calling her his whore implieth she was his own, and not his neighbour's. Truly, a commendable continence! and such as Scipio himself must have applauded;

⁷ Alluding to these lines in the Epist. to Dr. Arbuthnot:

'And has not Colley still his lord and whore,
His butchers Henley, his freemasons Moore?'

⁸ C. Cibber's Letter to Mr. P. p. 46

for how much self-denial was exerted not to covet his neighbour's whore! and what disorders must the coveting her have occasioned in that society, where (according to this political calculator) nine in ten of all ages have their concubines!

We have now, as briefly as we could devise, gone through the three constituent qualities of either hero: but it is not in any, nor in all of these, that heroism properly or essentially resideth. It is a lucky result rather from the collision of these lively qualities against one another. Thus, as from wisdom, bravery, and love, ariseth magnanimity, the object of admiration, which is the aim of the greater epic; so from vanity, impudence, and debauchery, springeth buffoonery, the source of ridicule, that 'laughing ornament,' as the owner well termeth it⁹ of the little epic.

He is not ashamed (God forbid he ever should be ashamed!) of this character, who deemeth that not reason, but risibility distinguisheth the human species from the brutal. 'As nature (saith this profound philosopher) distinguished our species from the mute creation by our risibility, her design must have been by that faculty as evidently to raise our happiness, as by our os sublime (our erected faces) to lift the dignity of our form above them.'¹⁰ All this considered, how complete a hero must he be, as well as how happy a man, whose risibility lieth not barely in his muscles, as in the common sort, but (as himself informeth us) in his very spirits: and whose os sublime is not simply an erect face, but a brazen head; as should seem by his preferring it to one of iron, said to belong to the late King of Sweden.¹¹

⁹ C. Cibber's Letter to Mr. P. p. 31.

¹⁰ C. Cibber's Life, pp. 23, 24.

But whatever personal qualities a hero may have, the examples of Achilles and Æneas show us that all these are of small avail without the constant assistance of the gods; for the subversion and erection of empires have never been adjudged the work of man. How greatly soever then we may esteem of his high talents, we can hardly conceive his personal prowess alone sufficient to restore the decayed empire of Dulness. So weighty an achievement must require the particular favour and protection of the great, who, being the natural patrons and supporters of letters, as the ancient gods were of Troy, must first be drawn off, and engaged in another interest, before the total subversion of them can be accomplished. To surmount, therefore, this last and greatest difficulty, we have, in this excellent man, a professed favourite and intimado of the great. And look of what force ancient piety was to draw the gods into the party of Æneas, that, and much stronger, is modern incense to engage the great in the party of Dulness.

Thus have we essayed to portray or shadow

out this noble imp of fame. But now the impatient reader will be apt to say, if so many and various graces go to the making up a hero, what mortal shall suffice to bear his character? Ill hath he read who seeth not, in every trace of this picture, that individual all-accomplished person, in whom these rare virtues and lucky circumstances have agreed to meet and concentre, with the strongest lustre and fullest harmony.

The good Scriblerus, indeed, nay, the world itself might be imposed on, in the late spurious editions, by I cannot tell what sham-hero or phantom; but it was not so easy to impose on him whom this egregious error most of all concerned: for no sooner had the fourth Book laid open the high and swelling scene, but he recognized his own heroic acts; and when he came to the words

(though laureate imply no more than one crowned with laurel, as becometh any associate or consort in empire) he loudly resented this indignity to violated majesty. Indeed not without cause, he being there represented as fast asleep; so misbecoming the eye of empire, which, like that of Jove, should never doze nor slumber. ‘Ha! (saith he) fast asleep it seems! that is a little too strong. Pert and dull at least you might have allowed me, but as seldom asleep as any fool.' ¹² However, the injured laureate may comfort himself with this reflection, that though it be a sleep, yet it is not the sleep of death, but of immortality. Here he will ¹³ live at least, though not awake, and in no worse condition than many an enchanted warrior before him. The famous Durandarte, for instance, was, like him, cast into a long slumber by Merlin the British bard and necromancer; and his example, for submitting to it with a good grace, might be of use to our hero: for that disastrous knight, being sorely pressed or driven to make his answer by several persons of quality, ¹⁴ only replied with a sigh, 'Patience, and shuffle the cards.' ¹⁵

But now, as nothing in this world, no, not the most sacred and perfect things either of religion or government, can escape the stings of envy, methinks I already hear these carpers objecting to the clearness of our hero's title.

It would never (say they) have been esteemed sufficient to make a hero for the Iliad or Æneis, that Achilles was brave enough to overturn one empire, or Æneas pious enough to raise another, had they not been goddess-born and princes-bred. What then did this author mean by erecting a player, instead of one of his patrons (a person ‘never a hero even on the stage!’)¹⁶ to this dignity of colleague in the empire of Dulness, and achiever of a work that neither old Omar, Attila, nor John of Leyden, could entirely bring to pass?

To all this we have, as we conceive, a sufficient answer from the Roman historian, Fabrum esse suæ quemque fortunæ: ‘that every man is the carver of his own fortune.’ The politic Florentine, Nicholas Machiavel, goeth still further, and affirmeth, that a man needeth but to believe himself a hero to be one of the worthiest that ever breathed. ‘Let him (saith he) but fancy himself capable of high things, and he will of course be able to achieve the highest.’ From this principle it followeth that nothing can exceed our hero’s prowess, as nothing ever equalled the greatness of his conceptions. Hear how he constantly paragons himself; at one time to Alexander the Great and Charles XII. of Sweden, for the excess and delicacy of his ambition;¹⁷ to Henry IV. of France, for honest policy;¹⁸ to the first Brutus, for love of liberty;¹⁹ and to Sir Robert Walpole, for good government while in power.²⁰ At another time to the godlike Socrates, for his diversions and amusements;²¹ to Horace, Montaigne, and Sir William Temple, for an elegant vanity that maketh them for ever read and admired:²² to two Lord Chancellors for law, from whom, when confederate against him at the bar, he carried away the prize of eloquence;²³ and to say all in a word, to the Right Reverend the Lord Bishop of London himself, in the art of writing pastoral letters.²⁴

Nor did his actions fall short of the sublimity of his conceit. In his early youth he met the revolution²⁵ face to face in Nottingham, at a time when his betters contented themselves with following her. It was here he got acquainted with old Battle-array, of whom he hath made so honourable mention in one of his immortal odes.²⁶ But he shone in courts as well as in camps; he was called up, when the nation fell in labour of this revolution,²⁷ and was a gossip at her christening, with the bishop and the ladies.²⁸

As to his birth, it is true he pretendeth no relation either to heathen god or goddess; but, what is as good, he was descended from a maker of both.²⁹ And that he did not pass himself on the world for a hero, as well by birth as education, was his own fault; for his lineage he bringeth into his life as an anecdote, and is sensible he had it in his power to be thought no body's son at all:⁸⁰ and what is that but coming into the world a hero?

But be it (the punctilious laws of epic poesy so requiring) that a hero of more than mortal birth must needs be had; even for this we have a remedy. We can easily derive our hero's pedigree from a goddess of no small power and authority amongst men; and legitimate and install him after the right classical and authentic fashion: for, like as the ancient sages found a son of Mars in a mighty warrior, a son of Neptune in a skilful seaman, a son of Phœbus in a harmonious poet; so have we here, if need be, a son of Fortune in an artful gamester: and who fitter than the offspring of Chance to assist in restoring the empire of Night and Chaos?

There is, in truth, another objection of greater weight, namely,—that this hero still existeth, and hath not yet finished his earthly course. For, if Solon said well,

* ———ultima semper

Expectanda dies homini: dicique beatus

Ante obitum nemo supremaque funera debet:*

‘That no man could be called happy till his death, surely much less can any one, till then, be pronounced a hero; this species of men being far more subject than others to the caprices of fortune and humour.’ But to this also we have an answer, that will (we hope) be deemed decisive. It cometh from himself, who, to cut this matter short, hath solemnly protested that he will never change or amend.

With regard to his vanity, he declareth that nothing shall ever part them. ‘Nature (saith he) hath amply supplied me in vanity; a pleasure which neither the pertness of wit, nor the gravity of wisdom will ever persuade me to part with.’³¹ Our poet had charitably endeavoured to administer a cure to it; but he telleth us plainly, ‘My superiors, perhaps, may be mended by him; but, for my part, I own myself incorrigible; I look upon my follies as the best part of my fortune.’³² And with good reason: we see to what they have brought him!

Secondly, as to buffoonery, ‘Is it (saith he) a time of day for me to leave off these fooleries, and set up a new character? I can no more put off my follies than my skin: I have often tried, but they stick too close to me; nor am I sure my friends are displeased with them, for in this light I afford them frequent matter of mirth,’ &c. &c.³³ Having then so publicly declared himself incorrigible, he is become dead in law, (I mean the law Epopæian) and devolveth upon the poet as his property; who may take him and deal with him like an old Egyptian hero, that is to say, embowel and embalm him for posterity.

Nothing therefore (we conceive) remaineth to hinder his own prophecy of himself from taking immediate effect. A rare felicity! and what few prophets have had the satisfaction to see alive! Nor can we conclude better than with that extraordinary one of his, which is conceived in these oraculous words, 'My dulness will find somebody to do it right.'⁸⁴

PREFACE

PREFIXED TO THE FIVE FIRST IMPERFECT EDITIONS
OF THE DUNCLAD, IN THREE BOOKS, PRINTED AT DUBLIN AND LONDON, IN OCTAVO AND DUODECIMO, 1727.

THE PUBLISHER¹ TO THE READER.

It will be found a true observation, though somewhat surprising, that when any scandal is vented against a man of the highest distinction and character, either in the state or literature, the public

¹ Who he was is uncertain; but Edward Ward tells us, in his Preface to Durgen, 'That most judges are of opinion this Preface is not of English extraction, but Hibernian,' &c. He means it was written by Dr. Swift, who, whether the publisher or not, may be said, in a sort, to be author of the poem. For when he, together with Mr. Pope (for reasons specified in the Preface to their Miscellanies), determined to own the most trifling pieces in which they had any hand, and to destroy all that remained in their power, the first sketch of this poem was snatched from the fire by Dr. Swift, who persuaded his friend to proceed in it, and to him it was therefore inscribed. But the occasion of printing it was as follows:

There was published in those Miscellanies a Treatise of the Bathos, or, Art of Sinking in Poetry, in which was a chapter where the species of bad writers were ranged in classes, and initial letters of names prefixed, for the most part, at random. But such was the number of poets eminent in that art, that some one or other took every letter to himself. All fell into so violent a fury, that for half a year, or more, in general afford it a most quiet reception, and the larger part accept it as favourably as if it were some kindness done to themselves: whereas, if a known scoundrel or blockhead but chance to be touched upon, a whole legion is up in arms, and it becomes the common cause of all scribblers, booksellers, and printers whatsoever.

Not to search too deeply into the reason hereof, I will only observe as a fact, that every week, for these two months past, the town has been persecuted with pamphlets, advertisements,² letters, the common newspapers (in most of which they had some property, as being hired writers) were filled with the most abusive falsehoods and scurrilities they could possibly devise, a liberty no ways to be wondered at in those people, and in those papers, that, for many years, during the uncontrolled license of the press, had aspersed almost all the great characters of the age; and this with impunity, their own persons and names being utterly secret and obscure. This gave Mr. Pope the thought, that he had now some opportunity of doing good, by detecting and dragging into light these common enemies of mankind: since, to invalidate this universal slander, it sufficed to show what contemptible men were the authors of it. He was not without hopes that, by manifesting the dulness of those who had only malice to recommend them, either the booksellers would not find their account in employing them, or the men themselves, when discovered, want courage to proceed in so unlawful an occupation. This it was that gave birth to the Dunciad; and he thought it a happiness that, by the late flood of slander on himself, he had acquired such a peculiar right over their names as was necessary to his design.

² See the list of those anonymous papers, with their dates and authors annexed, inserted before the poem.

and weekly essays, not only against the wit and writings, but against the character and person of Mr. Pope; and that of all those men who have received pleasure from his works, (which by modest computation may be about a hundred thousand³ in these kingdoms of England and Ireland, not to mention Jersey, Guernsey, the Orcades, those in the New World, and foreigners who have translated him into their languages) of all this number not a man hath stood up to say one word in his defence.

The only exception is the author⁴ of the following poem, who doubtless had either a better insight into the grounds of this clamour, or a better opinion of Mr. Pope's integrity, joined with a greater personal love for him than any other of his numerous friends and admirers.

Farther, that he was in his peculiar intimacy, appears from the knowledge he manifests of the most private authors of all the anonymous pieces against him, and from his having in this poem⁵ attacked no man living who had not before printed or published some scandal against this gentleman.

³ It is surprising with what stupidity this Preface, which is almost a continued irony, was taken by those authors. All such passages as these were understood by Curl, Cooke, Cibber, and others, to be serious. Hear the Laureate (Letter to Mr. Pope, p. 9). 'Though I grant the Dunciad a better poem of its kind than ever was writ, yet when I read it with those vainglorious incumbrances of notes and remarks upon it, &c.—it is amazing that you, who have writ with such masterly spirit upon the ruling passion, should be so blind a slave to your own, as not to see how far a low avarice of praise,' &c. (taking it for granted that the notes of Scriblerus and others were the author's own).

⁴ A very plain irony, speaking of Mr. Pope himself.

How I came possessed of it, is no concern to the reader; but it would have been a wrong to him had I detained the publication; since those names which are its chief ornaments die off daily so fast, as must render it too soon unintelligible. If it provoke the author to give us a more perfect edition, I have my end.

Who he is I cannot say, and (which is a great pity) there is certainly nothing in his style and manner of writing⁶ which can distinguish or discover him; for if it bears any resemblance to that of Mr. Pope, it is not improbable but it might be done on purpose, with a view to have it pass for his. But by the frequency of his allusions to Virgil, and a laboured (not to say affected) shortness in imitation of him, I should think him more an admirer of the Roman poet than of the Grecian, and in that not of the same taste with his friend.

I have been well informed that this work was

⁵ The publisher, in these words, went a little too far; but it is certain whatever names the reader finds that are unknown to him are of such; and the exception is only of two or three, whose dulness, impudent scurrilities, or self-conceit, all mankind agreed to have justly entitled them to a place in the Dunciad.

⁶ This irony had small effect in concealing the author. The Dunciad, imperfect as it was, had not been published two days, but the whole town gave it to Mr. Pope.

the labour of full six years of his life,⁷ and that he wholly retired himself from all the avocations and pleasures of the world to attend diligently to its correction and perfection ; and six years more he intended to bestow upon it, as it should seem by this verse of Statius, which was cited at the head of his manuscript :—

‘ Oh mihi bisseuos multum vigilata per annos,
Duncia ! ’⁸

Hence also we learn the true title of the poem ; which, with the same certainty as we call that of Homer the Iliad, of Virgil the Æneid, of Camöens the Lusiad, we may pronounce could have been, and can be, no other than

THE DUNCIAD.

It is styled heroic, as being doubly so ; not only

⁷ This also was honestly and seriously believed by divers gentlemen of the Dunciad. J. Ralph, preface to Sawney: ‘ We are told it was the labour of six years, with the utmost assiduity and application: it is no great compliment to the author’s sense to have employed so large a part of his life,’ &c. So also Ward, preface to Durgen: ‘ The Dunciad, as the publisher very wisely confesses, cost the author six years’ retirement from all the pleasures of life; though it is somewhat difficult to conceive, from either its bulk or beauty, that it could be so long in hatching,’ &c. But the length of time and closeness of application were mentioned to prepossess the reader with a good opinion of it.

They just as well understood what Scriblerus said of the poem.

⁸ The prefacer to Curl’s Key, p. 3, took this word to be really in Statius: ‘ By a quibble on the word Duncia, the Dunciad is formed ’ Mr. Ward also follows him in the same opinion.

with respect to its nature, which, according to the best rules of the ancients, and strictest ideas of the moderns, is critically such; but also with regard to the heroical disposition and high courage of the writer, who dared to stir up such a formidable, irritable, and implacable race of mortals.

There may arise some obscurity in chronology from the names in the poem, by the inevitable removal of some authors, and insertion of others in their niches: for, whoever will consider the unity of the whole design, will be sensible that the poem was not made for these authors, but these authors for the poem. I should judge that they were clapped in as they rose, fresh and fresh, and changed from day to day; in like manner as when the old boughs wither, we thrust new ones into a chimney.

I would not have the reader too much troubled or anxious, if he cannot decipher them; since, when he shall have found them out, he will probably know no more of the persons than before.

Yet we judged it better to preserve them as they are, than to change them for fictitious names; by which the satire would only be multiplied, and applied to many instead of one. Had the hero, for instance, been called Codrus, how many would have affirmed him to have been Mr. T., Mr. E., Sir R. B.? &c. but now all that unjust scandal is saved, by calling him by a name which, by good luck, happens to be that of a real person.

ADVERTISEMENT TO THE FIRST EDITION
WITH NOTES, QUARTO, 1729.

IT will be sufficient to say of this edition, that the reader has here a much more correct and complete copy of the Dunciad than has hitherto appeared. I cannot answer but some mistakes may have slipt into it, but a vast number of others will be prevented by the names being now not only set at length, but justified by the authorities and reasons given. I make no doubt the author's own motive to use real rather than feigned names, was his care to preserve the innocent from any false application; whereas, in the former editions, which had no more than the initial letters, he was made, by keys printed here, to hurt the inoffensive; and (what was worse) to abuse his friends, by an impression at Dublin.

The commentary which attends this poem was sent me from several hands, and consequently must be unequally written; yet will have one advantage over most commentaries, that it is not made upon conjectures, or at a remote distance of time: and the reader cannot but derive one pleasure from the very obscurity of the persons it treats of, that it partakes of the nature of a secret, which most people love to be let into, though the men or the things be ever so inconsiderable or trivial.

Of the persons, it was judged proper to give some account: for, since it is only in this monument that they must expect to survive, (and here survive they will, as long as the English tongue shall remain such as it was in the reigns of Queen Anne and King George) it seemed but humanity to bestow a word or two upon each, just to tell what he was, what he writ, when he lived, and when he died.

If a word or two more are added upon the chief offenders, it is only as a paper pinned upon the breast to mark the enormities for which they suffered; lest the correction only should be remembered, and the crime forgotten.

In some articles it was thought sufficient barely to transcribe from Jacob, Curll, and other writers of their own rank, who were much better acquainted with them than any of the authors of this comment can pretend to be. Most of them had drawn each other's characters on certain occasions; but the few here inserted are all that could be saved from the general destruction of such works.

Of the part of Scriblerus I need say nothing: his manner is well enough known, and approved by all out those who are too much concerned to be judges.

The imitations of the ancients are added, to gratify those who either never read, or may have forgotten them; together with some of the parodies and allusions to the most excellent of the moderns. If, from the frequency of the former, any man think the poem too much a cento, our poet will but appear to have done the same thing in jest which Boileau did in earnest, and upon which Vida, Fracastorius, and many of the most eminent Latin poets, professedly valued themselves.

TO THE FIRST EDITION OF THE FOURTH BOOK OF THE DUNCIAD, WHEN PRINTED SEPARATELY
IN THE YEAR 1742.

WE apprehend it can be deemed no injury to the author of the three first books of the Dunciad that we publish this fourth. It was found merely by accident, in taking a survey of the library of a late eminent nobleman; but in so blotted a condition, and in so many detached pieces, as plainly showed it to be not only incorrect, but unfinished. That the author of the three first books had a design to extend and complete his poem in this manner, appears from the dissertation prefixed to it, where it is said, that 'The design is more extensive, and that we may expect other episodes to complete it;' and, from the declaration in the argument to the third book, that ‘The accomplishment of the prophecies therein would be the theme hereafter of a greater Dunciad.’ But whether or no he be the author of this, we declare ourselves ignorant. If he be, we are no more to be blamed for the publication of it, than Tucca and Varius for that of the last six books of the Æneid, though, perhaps, inferior to the former.

If any person be possessed of a more perfect copy of this work, or of any other fragments of it, and will communicate them to the publisher, we shall make the next edition more complete: in which we also promise to insert any criticisms that shall be published (if at all to the purpose), with the names of the authors; or any letters sent us (though not to the purpose) shall yet be printed, under the title of Epistolæ obscurorum virorum; which, together with some others of the same kind, formerly laid by for that end, may make no unpleasant addition to the future impressions of this poem.

TO THE COMPLETE EDITION OF 1743.

I HAVE long had a design of giving some sort of notes on the works of this poet. Before I had the happiness of his acquaintance, I had written a commentary on his Essay on Man, and have since finished another on the Essay on Criticism. There was one already on the Dunciad, which had met with general approbation; but I still thought some additions were wanting (of a more serious kind) to the humorous notes of Scriblerus, and even to those written by Mr. Cleland, Dr. Arbuthnot, and others. I had lately the pleasure to pass some months with the author in the country, where I prevailed upon him to do what I had long desired, and favour me with his explanation of several passages in his works. It happened, that just at that juncture was published a ridiculous book against him, full of personal reflections, which furnished him with a lucky opportunity of improving this poem, by giving it the only thing it wanted, a more considerable hero. He was always sensible of its defect in that particular, and owned he had let it pass with the hero it had, purely for want of a better, not entertaining the least expectation that such a one was reserved for this post as has since obtained the laurel: but since that had happened, he could no longer deny this justice either to him or the Dunciad.

And yet I will venture to say, there was another motive which had still more weight with our author: this person was one who, from every folly (not to say vice) of which another would be ashamed, has constantly derived a vanity; and therefore was the man in the world who would least be hurt by it.

WHEREAS, upon occasion of certain pieces relating to the gentlemen of the Dunciad, some have been willing to suggest as if they looked upon them as an abuse ; we can do no less than own it is our opinion that to call these gentlemen bad authors is no sort of abuse, but a great truth. We cannot alter this opinion without some reason ; but we promise to do it in respect to every person who thinks it an injury to be represented as no wit, or poet, provided he procures a certificate of his being really such from any three of his companions in the Dunciad, or from Mr. Dennis singly, who is esteemed equal to any three of the number.

OF THE POET LAUREATE.

NOVEMBER 19, 1729.

THE time of the election of a Poet Laureate being now at hand, it may be proper to give some account of the rites and ceremonies anciently used at that solemnity, and only discontinued through the neglect and degeneracy of later times. These we have extracted from an historian of undoubted credit, a reverend bishop, the learned Paulus Jovius; and are the same that were practised under the pontificate of Leo X. the great restorer of learning.

As we now see an age and a court, that for the encouragement of poetry rivals, if not exceeds, that of this famous Pope, we cannot but wish a restoration of all its honours to poesy; the rather since there are so many parallel circumstances in the person who was then honoured with the laurel, and in him who (in all probability) is now to wear it.

I shall translate my author exactly as I find it in the 32d chapter of his Elogia Vir. Doct. He begins with the character of the poet himself, who was the original and father of all laureates, and called Camillo. He was a plain countryman of Apulia, whether a shepherd or thresher is not material. 'This man (says Jovius) excited by the fame of the great encouragement given to poets at court, and the high honour in which they were held, came to the city, bringing with him a strange kind of lyre in his hand, and at least some twenty thousand of verses. All the wits and critics of the court flocked about him, delighted to see a clown, with a ruddy, hale complexion, and in his own long hair, so top full of poetry; and at the first sight of him all agreed he was born to be Poet Laureate.¹ He had a most hearty welcome in an island of the river Tiber (an agreeable place, not unlike our Richmond), where he was first made to eat and drink plentifully, and to repeat his verses to every body. Then they adorned him with a new and elegant garland, composed of vine leaves, laurel, and brassica (a sort of cabbage), so composed, says my author, emblematically, ut tam sales, quam lepida ejus temulentia, brassicæ remedio cohibenda, notaretur. He was then saluted by common consent with the title of archipoeta, or arch-poet, in the style of those days; in ours, Poet Laureate. This honour the poor man received with the most sensible demonstrations of joy, his eyes drunk with tears and gladness.² Next, the public acclamation was expressed in a canticle, which is transmitted to us as follows:

‘Salve, brassicæ virens coronâ,
Et lauro, archipoeta, pampinoque!
Dignus principis auribus Leonis.’
‘All hail, arch-poet, without peer!
Vine, bay, or cabbage fit to wear,
And worthy of the prince’s ear.’

From hence he was conducted in pomp to the capitol of Rome, mounted on an elephant, through the shouts of the populace, where the ceremony ended.

The historian tells us farther, ‘That at his introduction to Leo, he not only poured forth verses innumerable, like a torrent, but also sung them with open mouth. Nor was he only once introduced, or on stated days (like our Laureates), but made a companion to his master, and entertained as one of the instruments of his most elegant pleasures. When the prince was at table, the poet had his place at the window. When the prince had half⁸ eaten his meat, he gave with his own hands the rest to the poet. When the poet drank, it was out of the prince's own flagon, insomuch (says the historian) that through so great good eating and drinking he contracted a most terrible gout.' Sorry I am to relate what follows, but that I cannot leave my reader's curiosity unsatisfied in the catastrophe of this extraordinary man. To use my author's words, which are remarkable, mortuo Leone profligatisque poetis, &c. 'When Leo died, and poets were no more,' (for I would not understand profligatis literally, as if poets then were profligate) this unhappy Laureate was forthwith reduced to return to his country, where, oppressed with old age and want, he miserably perished in a common hospital.

We see from this sad conclusion (which may be of example to the poets of our time) that it were happier to meet with no encouragement at all, to remain at the plough, or other lawful occupation, than to be elevated above their condition, and taken out of the common means of life, without a surer support than the temporary, or, at best, mortal favours of the great. It was doubtless for this consideration, that when the royal bounty was lately extended to a rural genius, care was taken to settle it upon him for life. And it hath been the practice of our princes never to remove from the station of Poet Laureate any man who hath once been chosen, though never so much greater geniuses might arise in his time. A noble instance how much the charity of our monarchs hath exceeded their love of fame.

To come now to the intent of this paper. We have here the whole ancient ceremonial of the Laureate. In the first place, the crown is to be mixed with vine leaves, as the vine is the plant of Bacchus, and full as essential to the honour, as the butt of sack to the salary.

Secondly, the brassica must be made use of as a qualifier of the former. It seems the cabbage was anciently accounted a remedy for drunkenness; a power the French now ascribe to the onion, and style a soup made of it, soupe d'ivrogne. I would recommend a large mixture of the brassica if Mr. Dennis be chosen; but if Mr. Tibbald, it is not so necessary, unless the cabbage be supposed to signify the same thing with respect to poets as to tailors, viz. stealing. I should judge it not amiss to add another plant to this garland, to wit, ivy; not only as it anciently belonged to poets in general, but as it is emblematical of the three virtues of a court poet in particular; it is creeping, dirty, and dangling.

In the next place, a canticle must be composed and sung in laud and praise of the new poet. If Mr. Cibber be laureated, it is my opinion no man can write this but himself; and no man, I am sure, can sing it so affectingly. But what this canticle should be, either in his or the other candidate's case, I shall not pretend to determine.

Thirdly, there ought to be a public show, or entry of the poet; to settle the order or procession of which, Mr. Anstis and Mr. Dennis ought to have a conference. I apprehend here two difficulties: one, of procuring an elephant; the other, of teaching the poet to ride him. Therefore I should imagine the next animal in size or dignity would do best; either a mule or a large ass; particularly if that noble one could be had, whose portraiture makes so great an ornament of the Dunciad, and which (unless I am misinformed) is yet in the park of a nobleman near this city:—unless Mr. Cibber be the man; who may, with great propriety and beauty, ride on a dragon, if he goes by land; or if he choose the water, upon one of his own swans from 'Cæsar in Egypt.'

We have spoken sufficiently of the ceremony; let us now speak of the qualifications and privileges of the Laureate. First, we see he must be able to make verses extempore, and to pour forth innumerable, if required. In this I doubt Mr. Tibbald. Secondly, he ought to sing, and intrepidly, patulo ore: here, I confess the excellency of Mr. Cibber. Thirdly, he ought to carry a lyre about with him. If a large one be thought too cumbersome, a small one may be contrived to hang about the neck, like an order, and be very much a grace to the person. Fourthly, he ought to have a good stomach, to eat and drink whatever his betters think fit; and therefore it is in this high office as in many others, no puny constitution can discharge it. I do not think Cibber or Tibbald here so happy: but rather a staunch, vigorous, seasoned, and dry old gentleman, whom I have in my eye.

I could also wish at this juncture such a person as is truly jealous of the honour and dignity of poetry; no joker, or trifler, but a bard in good earnest; nay, not amiss if a critic, and the better if a little obstinate. For when we consider what great privileges have been lost from this office (as we see from the forecited authentic record of Jovius), namely, those of feeding from the prince's table, drinking out of his own flagon, becoming even his domestic and companion; it requires a man warm and resolute to be able to claim and obtain the restoring of these high honours. I have cause to fear the most of the candidates would be liable, either through the influence of ministers, or for rewards or favours, to give up the glorious rights of the Laureate. Yet I am not without hopes, there is one, from whom a serious and steady assertion of these privileges may be expected; and, if there be such a one, I must do him the justice to say, it is Mr. Dennis, the worthy president of our society.

MR. DRYDEN, HIS POLITICS, RELIGION, MORALS.

MR. DRYDEN is a mere renegado from monarchy, poetry, and good sense.¹ A true republican son of monarchical church.² A republican atheist.³ Dryden was from the beginning an ἀλλοπρόσωλλος, and I doubt not will continue so to the last.⁴

In the poem called Absalom and Achitophel, are notoriously traduced the King, the Queen, the Lords, and Gentlemen; not only their honorable persons exposed, but the whole nation and its representatives notoriously libelled. It is scandalum magnatum, yea, of Majesty itself.⁵

He looks upon God's gospel as a foolish fable, like the Pope, to whom he is a pitiful purveyor.⁶ His very Christianity may be questioned.⁷ He ought to expect more severity than other men, as he is most unmerciful in his reflections on others.⁸

MR. POPE, HIS POLITICS, RELIGION, MORALS.

MR. POPE is an open and mortal enemy to his country, and the commonwealth of learning.¹ Some call him a Popish Whig, which is directly inconsistent.² Pope, as a Papist, must be a Tory and High-flier.³ He is both a Whig and Tory.⁴

He hath made it his custom to cackle to more than one party in their own sentiments.⁵

In his Miscellanies, the persons abused are the King, the Queen, his late Majesty, both Houses of Parliament, the Privy Council, the Bench of Bishops, the established Church, the present Ministry, &c. To make sense of some passages, they must be construed into royal scandal.⁶

He is a Popish rhymester, bred up with a contempt of the Sacred Writings.⁷ His religion allows him to destroy heretics, not only with his

MR. DRYDEN ONLY A VERSIFIER.

His whole libel is all bad matter, beautified (which is all that can be said of it) with good metre.¹⁰ Mr. Dryden's genius did not appear in any thing more than his versification, and whether he is to be ennobled for that only is a question.¹¹

MR. DRYDEN'S VIRGIL.

Tonson calls it Dryden's Virgil, to show that this is not that Virgil so admired in the Augustan age, but a Virgil of another stamp, a silly, impertinent, nonsensical writer.¹² None but a Bavius, a Mævius, or a Bathyllus, carped at Virgil; and none but such unthinking vermin admire his translator.¹³ It is true, soft and easy lines might become Ovid's Epistles or Art of Love—but Virgil, who is all great and majestic, &c. requires strength of lines, weight of words, and closeness of expression; not an ambling muse, running on carpet ground, and shod as lightly as a New-market racer.—He has numberless faults in his author's meaning, and in propriety of expression.¹⁴ pen, but with fire and sword; and such were all those unhappy wits whom he sacrificed to his accursed Popish principles.⁸ It deserved vengeance to suggest that Mr. Pope had less infallibility than his namesake at Rome.⁹

MR. POPE ONLY A VERSIFIER.

The smooth numbers of the Dunciad are all that recommend it, nor has it any other merit.¹⁰ It must be owned that he hath got a notable knack of rhyming and writing smooth verse.¹¹

MR. POPE'S HOMER.

The Homer which Lintot prints does not talk like Homer, but like Pope; and he who translated him, one would swear, had a hill in Tipperary for his Parnassus and a puddle in some bog for his Hippocrene.¹² He has no admirers among those that can distinguish, discern, and judge.¹³

He hath a knack at smooth verse, but without either genius or good sense, or any tolerable knowledge of English. The qualities which distinguish Homer are the beauties of his diction, and the harmony of his versification. But this little author, who is so much in vogue, has nei-

MR. DRYDEN UNDERSTOOD NO GREEK NOR LATIN

Mr. Dryden was once, I have heard, at Westminster School: Dr. Busby would have whipt him for so childish a paraphrase.¹⁵ The meanest pedant in England would whip a lubber of twelve for construing so absurdly.¹⁶ The translator is mad, every line betrays his stupidity.¹⁷ The faults are innumerable, and convince me that Mr. Dryden did not, or would not, understand his author.¹⁸ This shows how fit Mr. Dryden may be to translate Homer! A mistake in a single letter might fall on the printer well enough, but εἰωπ for αῶπ, must be the error of the author; nor had he art enough to correct it at the press.¹⁹ Mr. Dryden writes for the court ladies. He writes for the ladies, and not for use.²⁰

The translator puts in a little burlesque now and then into Virgil, for a ragout to his cheated subscribers.²¹

MR. DRYDEN TRICKED HIS SUBSCRIBERS.

I wonder that any man, who could not but be conscious of his own unfitness for it, should go to amuse the learned world with such an undertaking! A man ought to value his reputation more than money; and not to hope that those who can read for themselves, will be imposed

MR. POPE UNDERSTOOD NO GREEK.

He hath undertaken to translate Homer from the Greek, of which he knows not one word, into English, of which he understands as little.¹⁵ I wonder how this gentleman would look, should it be discovered that he has not translated ten verses together in any book of Homer with justice to the poet; and yet he dares reproach his fellow writers with not understanding Greek.¹⁶ He has stuck so little to his original, as to have his knowledge in Greek called in question.¹⁷ I should be glad to know which it is of all Homer's excellencies which has so delighted the ladies, and the gentlemen who judge like ladies.¹⁸

But he has a notable talent at burlesque; his genius slides so naturally into it, that he hath burlesqued Homer without designing it.¹⁹

BY AUTHORITY.

By virtue of the authority in us vested by the act for subjecting poets to the power of a licenser, we have revised this piece; where finding the style and appellation of king to have been given to a certain pretender, pseudo-poet, or phantom, of the name of Tibbald; and apprehending the same may be deemed in some sort a reflection on majesty, or at least an insult on that legal authority which has bestowed on another person the crown of poesy: we have ordered the said pretender, pseudo-poet, or phantom, utterly to vanish and evaporate out of this work; and do declare the said throne of poesy from henceforth to be abdicated and vacant, unless duly and lawfully supplied by the Laureate himself. And it is hereby enacted that no other person do presume to fill the same.

BY THE AUTHOR, A DECLARATION.

WHEREAS certain haberdashers of points and particles, being instigated by the spirit of pride, and assuming to themselves the name of critics and restorers, have taken upon them to adulterate the common and current sense of our glorious ancestors, poets of this realm, by clipping, coining, defacing the images, mixing their own base allay, or otherwise falsifying the same; which they publish, utter, and vend as genuine; the said haberdashers having no right thereto, as neither heirs, executors, administrators, assigns, or in any sort related to such poets, to all or any of them: Now we, having carefully revised this our Dunciad, beginning with the words 'The mighty mother,' and ending with the words 'buries all,' containing the entire sum of one thousand seven hundred and fifty-four verses, declare every word, figure, point, and comma, of this impression to be authentic: and do therefore strictly enjoin and forbid any person or persons whatsoever to erase, reverse, put between hooks, or by any other means, directly or indirectly, change or mangle any of them. And we do hereby earnestly exhort all our brethren to follow this our example, which we heartily wish our great predecessors had heretofore set, as a remedy and prevention of all such abuses. Provided always, that nothing in this declaration shall be construed to limit the lawful and undoubted right of every subject of this realm to judge, censure, or condemn, in the whole, or in part, any poem or poet whatsoever.

BOOK I.

ARGUMENT.

The Proposition, the Invocation, and the Inscription. Then the original of the great Empire of Dulness, and cause of the continuance thereof. The College of the Goddess in the city, with her private academy for poets in particular; the governors of it, and the four cardinal virtues. Then the poem hastes into the midst of things, presenting her, on the evening of a Lord Mayor's day, revolving the long succession of her sons, and the glories past and to come. She fixes her eye on Bayes, to be the instrument of that great event which is the subject of the poem. He is described pensive among his books, giving up the cause, and apprehending the period of her empire. After debating whether to betake himself to the church, or to gaming, or to party-writing, he raises an altar of proper books, and (making first his solemn prayer and declaration) purposes thereon to sacrifice all his unsuccessful writings. As the

REMARKS.

¹ This poem was written in the year 1726. In the next year an imperfect edition was published at Dublin, and reprinted at London in twelves; another at Dublin, and another at London in octavo; and three others in twelves the same year: but there was no perfect edition before that of London in quarto, which was attended with notes. We are willing to acquaint posterity, that this poem was presented to King George II. and his Queen, by the hands of Sir Robert Walpole, on the 12th of March, 1728-9.—SCHOL. VET.

It was expressly confessed in the preface to the first edition, that this poem was not published by the author himself pile is kindled, the Goddess, beholding the flame from her seat, flies and puts it out, by casting upon it the poem of Thulé. She forthwith reveals herself to him, transports him to her temple, unfolds her arts, and initiates him into her mysteries; then announcing the death of Eusden, the Poet Laureate, anoints him, carries him to court, and proclaims him successor.

REMARKS.

It was printed originally in a foreign country. And what foreign country? Why, one notorious for blunders; where finding blanks only instead of proper names, these blunderers filled them up at their pleasure.

The very hero of the poem hath been mistaken to this hour; so that we are obliged to open our notes with a discovery who he really was. We learn from the former editor, that this piece was presented by the hands of Sir Robert Walpole to King George II. Now the author directly tells us, his hero is the man ——— who brings

The Smithfield muses to the ear of kings.

And it is notorious who was the person on whom this Prince conferred the honour of the laurel.

It appears as plainly from the apostrophe to the great in the third verse, that Tibbald could not be the person, who was never an author in fashion, or caressed by the great: whereas this single characteristic is sufficient to point out the true hero; who, above all other poets of his time, was the peculiar delight and chosen companion of the nobility of England; and wrote, as he himself tells us, certain of his works at the earnest desire of persons of quality.

Lastly, the sixth verse affords full proof; this poet being the only one who was universally known to have had a son so exactly like him, in his poetical, theatrical, political, and moral capacities, that it could justly be said of him,

Still dunce the second reigns like dunce the first.

BENTLEY

THE mighty mother, and her son who brings
 The Smithfield muses to the ear of kings,²
 I sing. Say you, her instruments, the great!
 Call'd to this work by Dulness, Jovè, and Fate;
 You by whose care, in vain decried and curst,
 Still dunce the second reigns like dunce the first;⁶
 Say how the goddess bade Britannia sleep,
 And pour'd her spirit o'er the land and deep.

In eldest time, ere mortals writ or read,
 Ere Pallas issued from the Thunderer's head,
 Dulness o'er all possess'd her ancient right,
 Daughter of Chaos and eternal Night:
 Fate in their dotage this fair idiot gave,
 Gross as her sire, and as her mother grave;
 Laborious, heavy, busy, bold, and blind,
 She rul'd, in native anarchy, the mind.

REMARKS.

² The Smithfield muses] Smithfield is the place where Bartholomew Fair was kept, whose shows, machines, and dramatical entertainments, formerly agreeable only to the taste of the rabble, were, by the hero of this poem, and others of equal genius, brought to the theatres of Covent Garden, Lincoln's-inn-fields, and the Haymarket, to be the reigning pleasures of the court and town. This happened in the reigns of King George I. and II. See Book iii.

Whether thou choose Cervantes' serious air,
Or laugh and shake in Rabelais' easy chair,
Or praise the court, or magnify mankind,
Or thy griev'd country's copper chains unbind;²⁴
From thy Bæotia though her power retires,
Mourn not, my Swift! at aught our realm requires.
Here pleas'd behold her mighty wings outspread
To hatch a new Saturnian age of lead.

Close to those walls where folly holds her throne,
And laughs to think Monroe would take her down,
Where o'er the gates, by his fam'd father's hand,³¹
Great Cibber's brazen, brainless brothers stand;
One cell there is, conceal'd from vulgar eye,
The cave of poverty and poetry:
Keen hollow winds howl through the bleak recess,
Emblem of music caus'd by emptiness:
Hence bards, like Proteus long in vain tied down,
Escape in monsters, and amaze the town;

²⁴ Relating to the papers of the Drapier against the currency of Wood's copper coin in Ireland; which, upon the great discontent of the people, His Majesty was graciously pleas'd to recall.

³¹ — By his fam'd father's hand] Mr. Caius-Gabriel Cibber, father of the Poet Laureate. The two statues of the lunatics over the gates of Bedlam Hospital were done by him, and (as the son justly says of them) are no ill monuments of his fame as an artist.

HOE.

Where, in nice balance, truth with gold she weighs,
And solid pudding against empty praise.

Here she beholds the chaos dark and deep,⁶⁵
Where nameless somethings in their causes sleep,
Till genial Jacob, or a warm third day,⁶⁷
Call forth each mass, a poem or a play :
How hints, like spawn, scarce quick in embryo lie,
How new-born nonsense first is taught to cry,
Maggots, half-form'd, in rhyme exactly meet,
And learn to crawl upon poetic feet.
Here one poor word a hundred clenches makes,
And ductile dulness new meanders takes ;⁶⁴
There motley images her fancy strike,
Figures ill pair'd, and similes unlike.
She sees a mob of metaphors advance,
Pleas'd with the madness of the mazy dance ;

REMARKS.

⁶⁷ genial Jacob] Tonson, the bookseller.

IMITATIONS.

⁶⁵ *Here she beholds the chaos dark and deep,
Where nameless somethings, &c.]*

that is to say, unformed things, which are either made into poems, or plays, as the booksellers or the players bid most. These lines allude to the following in Garth's Dispensary, canto vi.

' Within the chambers of the globe they spy
The beds where sleeping vegetables lie,
Till the glad summons of a genial ray
Unbinds the glebe, and calls them out to day.'

⁶⁴ And ductile dulness, &c.] A parody on a verse in Garth, canto i.

' How ductile matter new meanders takes.'

How tragedy and comedy embrace ;
 How farce and epic get a jumbled race ;
 How time himself stands still at her command,
 Realms shift their place, and ocean turns to land.
 Here gay description Egypt glads with showers,
 Or gives to Zembla fruits, to Barea flowers ;
 Glittering with ice here hoary hills are seen,
 There painted valleys of eternal green ;
 In cold December fragrant chaplets blow,
 And heavy harvests nod beneath the snow.

All these, and more, the cloud-compelling queen ⁷⁹
 Beholds through fogs that magnify the scene.
 She, tinseld o'er in robes of varying hues,
 With self-applause her wild creation views ;
 Sees momentary monsters rise and fall,
 And with her own fools-colours gilds them all.

'Twas on the day when Thorold, rich and grave, ⁸⁶
 Like Cimon, triumph'd both on land and wave : (Pomps without guilt, of bloodless swords and maces,
 Glad chains, warm furs, broad banners, and broad faces)

REMARKS.

⁸⁶ Thorold] Sir George Thorold, Lord Mayor of London in the year 1720. The procession of a Lord Mayor is made partly by land and partly by water. Cimon, the famous Athenian general, obtained a victory by sea, and another by land, on the same day over the Persians and Barbarians.

IMITATIONS.

⁷⁹ — the cloud-compelling queen] From Homer's epithet of Jupirer, νεφεληγερέτα Ζεύς.

Now night descending, the proud scene was o'er,
 But liv'd in Settle's numbers one day more.⁹⁰
 Now mayors and shrieves all hush'd and satiate lay,
 Yet eat, in dreams, the custard of the day ;
 While pensive poets painful vigils keep,
 Sleepless themselves to give their readers sleep.
 Much to the mindful queen the feast recalls
 What city swans once sung within the walls ;
 Much she revolves their arts, their ancient praise,
 And sure succession down from Heywood's days.⁹⁸
 She saw with joy the line immortal run,
 Each sire imprest and glaring in his son .
 So watchful Bruin forms, with plastic care,
 Each growing lump, and brings it to a bear.
 She saw old Prynne in restless Daniel shine,¹⁰⁰
 And Eusden eke out Blackmore's endless line ;¹⁰⁴

REMARKS

⁹⁰ But liv'd in Settle's numbers one day more] Settle was poet to the City of London. His office was to compose yearly panegyrics upon the Lord Mayors, and verses to be spoken in the pageants: but that part of the shows being at length frugally abolished, the employment of City Poet ceased; so that upon Settle's demise there was no successor to that place.

⁹⁸ John Heywood] Whose interludes were printed in the time of Henry VIII.

¹⁰⁰ ———restless Daniel] Daniel De Foe.

¹⁰⁴ And Eusden eke out, &c.] Laurence Eusden, poet laureate. Mr. Jacob gives a catalogue of some few only of his works, which are very numerous. Mr. Cooke, in 'his Battle of Poets, saith of him,

'Eusden, a laurel'd bard, by fortune rais'd,
 By very few was read, by fewer prais'd.'

She saw slow Philips creep like Tate's poor page,¹⁰⁶
And all the mighty mad in Dennis rage.
In each she marks her image full exprest,
But chief in Bayes's monster-breeding breast;
Bayes, form'd by nature stage and town to bless,
And act, and be, a coxcomb with success:
Dulness with transport eyes the lively dunce,
Remembering she herself was pertness once.
Now (shame to fortune!) an ill run at play
Blank'd his bold visage, and a thin third day:
Swearing and supperless the hero sate,
Blasphem'd his gods, the dice, and damn'd his fate;
Then gnaw'd his pen, then dash'd it on the ground,
Sinking from thought to thought, a vast profound!
Plung'd for his sense, but found no bottom there,
Yet wrote and flounder'd on in mere despair.
Round him much embryo, much abortion lay,
Much future ode, and abdicated play;
Nonsense precipitate, like running lead,
That slipp'd through cracks and zigzags of the head;
All that on folly frenzy could beget,
Fruits of dull heat, and sooterkins of wit.

REMARKS.

¹⁰⁶ Like Tate's poor page] Nahum Tate was poet laureate; a cold writer, of no invention; but sometimes translated tolerably when befriended by Mr. Dryden. In his second part of Absalom and Achitophel are above two hundred admirable lines together of that great hand, which strongly shine through the insipidity of the rest. Something parallel may be observed of another author here mentioned.

Next o'er his books his eyes began to roll,
 In pleasing memory of all he stole;
 How here he sipp'd, how there he plunder'd snug,
 And suck'd all o'er like an industrious bug.
 Here lay poor Fletcher's half-eat scenes, and here
 The frippery of crucified Moliere;
 There hapless Shakspeare, yet of Tibbald sore,
 Wish'd he had blotted for himself before.
 The rest on outside merit but presume,
 Or serve (like other fools) to fill a room;
 Such with their shelves as due proportion hold,
 Or their fond parents dress'd in red and gold;
 Or where the pictures for the page atone,
 And Quarles is sav'd by beauties not his own.
 Here swells the shelf with Ogilby the great;¹⁴¹
 There, stamp'd with arms, Newcastle shines complete:¹⁴²

REMARKS.

¹⁴¹ Ogilby the great] 'John Ogilby was one who, from a late initiation into literature, made such a progress as might well style him the prodigy of his time! sending into the world so many large volumes! His translations of Homer and Virgil done to the life, and with such excellent sculptures: and (what added great grace to his works) he printed them all on special good paper, and in a very good letter.'

WINSTANLEY, Lives of Poets.

¹⁴² There, stamp'd with arms, Newcastle shines complete] The Duchess of Newcastle was one who busied herself in the ravishing delights of poetry; leaving to posterity in print three ample volumes of her studious endeavours.' Winstanley, ibid. Langbaine reckons up eight folios of her Grace's, which were usually adorned with gilded covers, and had her coat of arms upon them.

Here all his suffering brotherhood retire,
 And 'scape the martyrdom of jakes and fire :
 A Gothic library ! of Greece and Rome
 Well purg'd, and worthy Settle, Banks, and Broome.¹⁴⁶

But, high above, more solid learning shone,¹⁴⁷
 The classics of an age that heard of none ;
 There Caxton slept, with Wynkyn at his side,¹⁴⁸
 One clasp'd in wood, and one in strong cow-hide ;

¹⁴⁶ —worthy Settle, Banks, and Broome] The poet has mentioned these three authors in particular, as they are parallel to our hero in his three capacities: 1. Settle was his brother laureate; only indeed upon half-pay, for the city instead of the court; but equally famous for unintelligible flights in his poems on public occasions, such as shows, birthdays, &c. 2. Banks was his rival in tragedy, though more successful in one of his tragedies, the Earl of Essex, which is yet alive: Anna Boleyn, the Queen of Scots, and Cyrus the Great are dead and gone. These he dressed in a sort of beggar's velvet, or a happy mixture of the thick fustian and thin prosaic; exactly imitated in Perolla and Isidora, Caesar in Egypt, and the Heroic Daughter. 3. Broome was a serving-man of Ben Jonson, who once picked up a comedy from his betters, or from some cast scenes of his master's, not entirely contemptible.

¹⁴⁷ More solid learning] Some have objected that books of this sort suit not so well the library of our Bays, which they imagined consisted of novels, plays, and obscene books; but they are to consider that he furnished his shelves only for ornament, and read these books no more than the dry bodies of divinity, which, no doubt, were purchased by his father, when he designed him for the gown.

¹⁴⁸ Caxton] A printer in the time of Edw. IV. Ric'h. III. and Henry VII. Wynkyn de Worde, his successor, in that of Henry VII. and VIII.

There, sav'd by spice, like mummies, many a year,
Dry bodies of divinity appear:

De Lyra there a dreadful front extends,¹⁵³

And here the groaning shelves Philemon bends.¹⁵⁴

Of these, twelve volumes, twelve of amplest size,
Redeem'd from tapers and defrauded pies,

Inspir'd he seizes: these an altar raise;

A hecatomb of pure unsullied lays

That altar crowns; a folio common-place

Founds the whole pile, of all his works the base:

Quartos, octavos, shape the lessening pyre,

A twisted birth-day ode completes the spire.

Then he: 'Great tamer of' all human art!

First in my care, and ever at my heart;

Dulness! whose good old cause I yet defend,

With whom my muse began, with whom shall end,¹⁵⁵

¹⁵³ De Lyra] A very voluminous commentator, whose works, in five vast folios, were printed in 1472.

¹⁵⁴ Philemon] Philemon Holland, doctor in physic. 'He translated so many books, that a man would think he had done nothing else; inasmuch that he might be called translator-general of his age. The books alone of his turning into English are sufficient to make a country gentleman a complete library.'

O thou! of business the directing soul
To this our head, like bias to the bowl,
Which, as more ponderous, made its aim more true,

Obliquely waddling to the mark in view:
Oh! ever gracious to perplex'd mankind,
Still spread a healing mist before the mind;
And, lest we err by wit's wild dancing light,
Secure us kindly in our native night.
Or, if to wit a coxcomb make pretence,
Guard the sure barrier between that and sense;
Or quite unravel all the reasoning thread,
And hang some curious cobweb in its stead!
As, fore'd from wind-guns, lead itself can fly,
And ponderous slugs cut swiftly through the sky;
As clocks to weight their nimble motion owe,
The wheels above urg'd by the load below;
Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
And were my elasticity and fire.
Some demon stole my pen (forgive th' offence),
And once betray'd me into common sense:
Else all my prose and verse were much the same;
This prose on stilts, that poetry fallen lame.

REMARKS.

¹⁶⁷ E'er since Sir Fopling's periwig] The first visible cause of the passion of the town for our hero was a fair flaxen full-bottomed periwig, which, he tells us, he wore in his first play of the Fool in Fashion. It attracted, in a particular manner, the friendship of Col. Brett, who purchased it.

²³³ —with Ward to ape-and-monkey climes] ‘Edward Ward, a very voluminous poet in Hudibrastic verse, but best known by the London Spy, in prose. He has of late years kept a public house in the city (but in a genteel way), and with his wit, humour, and good liquor (ale), afforded his guests a pleasurable entertainment, especially those of the high-church party.’ JACOB, Lives of Poets, vol. ii. p. 225. Great numbers of his works were yearly sold into the Plantations. Ward, in a book called Apollo’s Maggot, declared this account to be a great falsity, protesting that his public-house was not in the city, but in Moorfields.

NOTES.

286 — Tibbald] Lewis Tibbald (as pronounced), or Theobald (as written), was bred an attorney, and son to an attorney (says Mr. Jacob) of Sittenburn in Kent. He was author of some forgotten plays, translations, and other pieces. He was concerned in a paper called the Censor, and a translation of Ovid. 'There is a notorious idiot, one hight Whachum, who, from an under spur-leather to the law, is become an understrapper to the playhouse, who hath lately burlesqued the Metamorphoses of Ovid by a vile translation. &c. This fellow is concerned in an impertinent paper called the Censor.' DENNIS, Rem. on Pope's Homer, p. 9, 10.

286 Ozell] Mr. John Ozell (if we credit Mr. Jacob) did go to school in Leicestershire, where somebody left him something to live on, when he shall retire from business. He was designed to be sent to Cambridge, in order for priesthood; but he chose rather to be placed in an office of accounts in the city, being qualified for the same by his skill in arithmetic, and writing the necessary hands. He has obliged the world with many translations of French plays.'

JACOB, Lives of Dram. Poets, p. 198.

Mr. Jacob's character of Mr. Ozell seems vastly short of his merits, and he ought to have further justice done him, having since fully confuted all sarcasms on his learning and genius, by an advertisement of Sept. 20, 1729, in a paper called the Weekly Medley, &c. 'As to my learning, this envious wretch knew, and every body knows, that the whole bench of bishops, not long ago, were pleased to give me a purse of guineas for discovering the erroneous translations of the common prayer in Portuguese, Spanish, French, Italian, &c. As for my genius, let Mr. Cleland show better verses in all Pope's works than Ozell's version of Boileau's Lutrin, which the late Lord Halifax was so pleased with, that he complimented him with leave to dedicate it to him, &c. Let him show better and truer poetry in the Rape of the Lock, than in Ozell's Rape of the Bucket (La Secchia rapita). And Mr. Toland and Mr. Gildon publicly declared Ozell's translation of Homer to be, as it was prior, so likewise superior to Pope's.—Surely, surely, every man is free to deserve well of his country.' JOHN OZELL.

We cannot but subscribe to such reverend testimonies as those of the bench of bishops, Mr. Toland, and Mr. Gildon.

²⁹⁶ Withers] ‘ He was a great pretender to poetical zeal against the vices of the times, and abused the greatest personages in power, which brought upon him frequent correction. The Marshalsea and Newgate were no strangers to him.’ WINSTANLEY.

²⁹⁶ Gildon] Charles Gildon, a writer of criticisms and libels, of the last age, bred at St. Omer’s with the Jesuits; but renouncing popery, he published Blount’s books against the divinity of Christ, the Oracles of Reason, &c. He signalized himself as a critic, having written some very bad plays; abused Mr. P. very scandalously in an anonymous pamphlet of the Life of Mr. Wycherley, printed by Curll; in another, called The New Rehearsal, printed in 1714; in a third, entitled The Complete Art of English Poetry, in two volumes; and others.

³⁰⁹ under Archer's wing.—Gaming, &c.] when the statute against gaming was drawn up, it was represented, that the king, by ancient custom, plays at hazard one night in the year; and therefore a clause was inserted, with an exception as to that particular. Under this pretence, the groom-porter had a room appropriated to gaming all the summer the court was at Kensington, which his majesty accidentally being acquainted of, with a just indignation prohibited. It is reported the same practice is yet continued wherever the court resides, and the hazard-table there open to all the professed gamblers in town.

‘God save King Cibber!’ mounts in every note.
Familiar White’s, ‘God save King Colley!’ cries;
‘God save King Colley!’ Drury-lane replies.
To Needham’s quick the voice triumphant rode,
But pious Needham dropt the name of God; ⁸²⁴
Back to the Devil the last echoes roll, ⁸²⁵
And ‘Coll!’ each butcher roars at Hockley-hole.

So when Jove’s block descended from on high,
(As sings thy great forefather Ogilby)
Loud thunder to its bottom shook the bog,
And the hoarse nation croak’d, ‘God save King
Log!’ ⁸³⁰

REMARKS.

⁸¹⁹ Chapel-royal] The voices and instruments used in the service of the chapel-royal being also employed in the performance of the birthday and new-year odes.

⁸²⁴ But pious Needham] A matron of great fame, and very religious in her way; whose constant prayer it was that she might ‘get enough by her profession to leave it off in time, and make her peace with God.’ But her fate was not so happy; for being convicted, and set in the pillory, she was (to the lasting shame of all her great friends and votaries) so ill used by the populace, that it put an end to her days.

⁸²⁵ the Devil] The Devil tavern in Fleet-street, where the court odes were usually rehearsed.

⁸³⁰ God save king Log] See Ogilby’s Esop’s Fables, where, in the story of the Frogs and their king, this excellent hemistich is to be found.

BOOK II.

ARGUMENT.

The King being proclaimed, the solemnity is graced with public games and sports of various kinds; not instituted by the hero, as by Æneas in Virgil, but for greater honour by the goddess in person (in like manner as the games Pythia, Isthmia, &c. were anciently said to be ordained by the gods, and as Thetis herself appearing, according to Homer, Odyssey xxiv. proposed the prizes in honour of her son Achilles). Hither flock the poets and critics, attended, as is but just, with their patrons and booksellers. The goddess is first pleased, for her disport, to propose games to the booksellers, and setteth up the phantom of a poet, which they contend to overtake. The races described, with their divers accidents. Next, the game for a poetess. Then follow the exercises for the poets, of tickling, vociferating, diving; the first holds forth the arts and practices of dedicators, the second of disputants and fustian poets, the third of profound, dark, and dirty party-writers. Lastly, for the critics the goddess proposes (with great propriety) an exercise, not of their parts, but their patience, in hearing the works of two voluminous authors, the one in verse and the other in prose, deliberately read, without sleeping; the various effects of which, with the several degrees and manners of their operation, are here set forth, till the whole number, not of critics only, but of spectators, actors, and all present, fall fast asleep; which naturally and necessarily ends the games.

HIGH on a gorgeous seat, that far outshone¹
 Henley's gilt tub or Fleckno's Irish throne,²
 Or that where on her Curlls the public pours,³
 All bounteous, fragrant grains and golden showers,
 Great Cibber sate: the proud Parnassian sneer,
 The conscious simper, and the jealous leer,
 Mix on his look: all eyes direct their rays
 On him, and crowds turn coxcombs as they gaze.
 His peers shine round him with reflected grace,
 New edge their dulness, and new bronze their face.
 So from the sun's broad beam, in shallow urns,
 Heaven's twinkling sparks draw light, and point their horns.

REMARKS.

¹ Henley] Orator Henley—See Book iii. ver. 199.

² Fleckno's Irish throne] Richard Fleckno was an Irish priest, but had laid aside (as himself expressed it) the mechanic part of priesthood. He printed some plays, poems, letters, and travels. I doubt not our author took occasion to mention him in respect to the poem of Mr. Dryden, to which this bears some resemblance, though of a character more different from it than that of the Æneid from the Iliad, or the Lutrin of Boileau from the Défaite des Bouts rimés of Sarazin.

³ Or that where on her Curlls, &c.] Edmund Curll stood in the pillory at Charing-Cross, March 1727-8.

IMITATIONS.

¹ High on a gorgeous seat] Parody of Milton, book ii.

'High on a throne of royal state, which far
 Outshone the wealth of Ormus and of Ind,
 Or where the gorgeous East with richest hand
 Showers on her kings barbaric pearl and gold,
 Satan exalted sate.'

Not with more glee, by hands pontific crown'd
 With scarlet hats wide-waving circled round,
 Rome in her capitol saw Querno sit,¹⁵
 Thron'd on seven hills, the antichrist of wit.

And now the Queen, to glad her sons, proclaims
 By herald hawkers high heroic games.
 They summon all her race: an endless band
 Pours forth, and leaves unpeopled half the land;
 A motley mixture! in long wigs, in bags,
 In silks, in crapes, in garters, and in rags,
 From drawing rooms, from colleges, from garrets,
 On horse, on foot, in hacks, and gilded chariots;
 All who true dunces in her cause appear'd,
 And all who knew those dunces to reward.

Amid that area wide they took their stand,
 Where the tall Maypole once o'erlook'd the Strand,

REMARKS.

¹⁵ Rome in her capitol saw Querno sit] Camillo Querno was of Apulia, who, hearing the great encouragement which Leo X. gave to poets, travelled to Rome with a harp in his hand, and sung to it twenty thousand verses of a poem called Alexias. He was introduced as a buffoon to Leo, and promoted to the honour of the laurel; a jest which the court of Rome and the Pope himself entered into so far, as to cause him to ride on an elephant to the capitol, and to hold a solemn festival on his coronation; at which, it is recorded, the poet himself was so transported as to weep for joy.* He was ever after a constant frequenter of the Pope's table, drank abundantly, and poured forth verses without number. Paulus Jovius, Elog. Vir. doct. cap. xxxii. Some idea of his poetry is given by Fam. Strada in his Prolusions.

But now (so Anne and piety ordain)
A church collects the saints of Drury-lane.

With authors, stationers obey'd the call;
(The field of glory is a field for all)
Glory and gain th' industrious tribe provoke,
And gentle Dulness ever loves a joke.
A poet's form she plac'd before their eyes,⁸⁵
And bade the nimblest racer seize the prize;
No meagre, muse-rid mope, adust and thin,
In a dun nightgown of his own loose skin,
But such a bulk as no twelve bards could raise,⁸⁹
Twelve starveling bards of these degenerate days.
All as a partridge plump, full fed and fair,
She form'd this image of well-bodied air;

⁸⁵ A poet's form she plac'd before their eyes] This is what Juno does to deceive Turnus, Æn. x.

In faciem Æneæ (visu mirabile monstrum!)
Dardaniis ornat telis, clypeumque jubaque
Divini assimilat capitis, dat inania verba,
Dat sine mente sonum——'

The reader will observe how exactly some of these verses suit with their allegorical application here to a plagiary. There seems to me a great propriety in this episode, where such a one is imaged by a phantom that deludes the grasp of the expecting bookseller.

 A brain of feathers, and a heart of lead;
 And empty words she gave, and sounding

But senseless, lifeless idol, void and vain!
 Never was dash'd out, at one lucky hit,
 A fool so just a copy of a wit;
 So like, that critics said, and courtiers swore,
 A wit it was, and call'd the phantom Moore.⁵⁰

All gaze with ardour: some a poet's name,
 Others a swordknot and lac'd suit inflame.
 But lofty Lintot in the circle rose:⁵³
 'This prize is mine, who tempt it are my foes;
 With me began this genius, and shall end.'
 He spoke; and who with Lintot shall contend?

REMARKS.

⁵⁰ Moore] Curll, in his key to the Dunciad, affirmed this to be James Moore Smith, Esq. He borrowed of Dr. Arbuthnot a paper called an Historico-physical account of the South-sea; and of Mr. Pope, the Memoirs of a Parish Clerk, which for two years he kept, and read to the Rev. Dr. Young, F. Billers, Esq. and many others as his own: Being applied to for them, he pretended they were lost; but there happening to be another copy of the latter, it came out in Swift and Pope's Miscellanies.

⁵³ But lofty Lintot] We enter here upon the Episode of the booksellers; persons, whose names being more known and famous in the learned world than those of the authors in this poem, do therefore need less explanation. The action of Mr. Lintot here imitates that of Dares in Virgil, rising just in this manner to lay hold on a bull. This eminent bookseller printed Moore's play, the Rival Modes.

Fear held them mute. Alone untaught to fear,
 Stood dauntless Curll: 'Behold that rival here!'⁵⁸

REMARKS.

⁵⁸ Stood dauntless Curll] We come now to a character of much respect, that of Mr. Edmund Curll. As a plain repetition of great actions is the best praise of them, we shall only say of this eminent man, that he carried the trade many lengths beyond what it ever before had arrived at; and that he was the envy and admiration of all his profession. He possessed himself of a command over all authors whatever; he caused them to write what he pleased; they could not call their very names their own. He was not only famous among these; he was taken notice of by the state, the church, and the law, and received particular marks of distinction from each.

It will be owned that he is here introduced with all possible dignity: he speaks like the intrepid Diomed; he runs like the swift-footed Achilles; if he falls, 'tis like the beloved Nisus, and (what Homer makes to be the chief of all praises) he is favoured of the gods: he says but three words, and his prayer is heard; a goddess conveys it to the seat of Jupiter. Though he loses the prize, he gains the victory; the great mother herself comforts him, she inspires him with expedients, she honours him with an immortal present (such as Achilles receives from Thetis, and Æneas from Venus) at once instructive and prophetic. After this he is unrivalled and triumphant.

The tribute our author here pays him is a grateful return for several unmerited obligations: many weighty animadversions on the public affairs, and many excellent and diverting pieces on private persons, has he given to his name. If ever he owed two verses to any other, he owed Mr. Curll some thousands. He was every day extending his fame, and enlarging his writings; witness innumerable instances; but it shall suffice only to mention the Court Poems, which he meant to publish as the work of the true writer, a lady of quality; but being first threatened, and afterwards punished for it by Mr. Pope, he generously transferred it from her to him, and ever since printed it in his name. The single time that ever he spoke to C. was on that affair, and to that happy incident he owed all the favours since received from him: so true is the saying of Dr. Sydenham, 'That any one shall be, at some time or other, the better or the worse for having but seen or spoken to a good or bad man.'

⁶¹ Swift as a bard, &c.] Something like this is in Homer, Iliad x. ver. 220, of Diomed. Two different manners of the same author in his similes are also imitated in the two following; the first, of the Bailiff, is short, unadorned, and (as the critics well know) from familiar life; the second, of the Waterfowl, more extended, picturesque, and from rural life. The 59th verse is likewise a literal translation of one in Homer.

REMARKS.

⁷⁰ Curll's Corinna] This name, it seems, was taken by one Mrs. Thomas, who procured some private letters of Mr. Pope, while almost a boy, to Mr. Cromwell, and sold them without the consent of either of those gentlemen to Curll, who printed them in 12mo. 1727. He discovered her to be the publisher, in his Key, p. 11. We only take this opportunity of mentioning the manner in which those letters got abroad, which the author was ashamed of as very trivial things, full not only of levities, but of wrong judgments of men and books, and only excusable from the youth and inexperience of the writer.

 The caitiff vaticide conceiv'd a prayer.

In office here fair Cloacina stands,⁹⁸
And ministers to Jove with purest hands.
Forth from the heap she pick'd her votary's prayer,
And plac'd it next him, a distinction rare!
Oft had the goddess heard her servant's call,
From her black grottos near the temple wall,
Listening delighted to the jest unclean
Of linkboys vile, and watermen obscene;
Where as he fish'd her nether realms for wit,
She oft had favour'd him, and favours yet.
Renew'd by ordure's sympathetic force,
As oil'd with magic juices for the course,

¹²⁴ — Like Congreve, Addison, and Prior] These authors being such whose names will reach posterity, we shall not give any account of them, but proceed to those of whom it is necessary.—Bezaleel Morris was author of some satires on the translations of Homer, with many other things printed in newspapers. 'Bond writ a satire against Mr. P.— Capt. Breval was author of The Confederates, an ingenious dramatic performance, to expose Mr. P., Mr. Gay, Dr. Arbuthnot, and some ladies of quality,' says Curll, Key, p. 11.

 Cook shall be Prior ; and Concanen Swift ;¹³⁸

REMARKS.

¹²⁸ Joseph Gay] A fictitious name put by Curll before several pamphlets, which made them pass with many for Mr. Gay's. The ambiguity of the word Joseph, which likewise signifies a loose upper coat, gives much pleasantry to the idea.

¹³² And turn this whole illusion on the town] It was a common practice of this bookseller to publish vile pieces of obscure hands under the names of eminent authors.

¹³⁸ ——— and Concanen Swift] In the first edition of this poem there were only asterisks in this place : but the names were since inserted, merely to fill up the verse, and give ease to the ear of the reader.

²⁰⁷ — Welsted] Leonard Welsted, author of the Triumvirate, or, A Letter in verse from Palæmon to Celia at Bath, which was meant for a satire on Mr. P. and some of his friends, about the year 1718. He writ other things, which we cannot remember. Smedley, in his Metamorphosis of Scriblerus, mentions one, the Hymn of a Gentleman to his Creator: and there was another in praise either of a cellar, or a garret. L. W., characterized in the treatise Περὶ Βάθους, or The Art of Sinking, as a didapper, and after as an eel, is said to be this person, by Dennis, Daily Journal of May 11, 1728.

He was also characterized under another animal, a mole

While thus each hand promotes the pleasing pain,
And quick sensations skip from vein to vein,
A youth unknown to Phœbus, in despair,
Puts his last refuge all in heaven and prayer.
What force have pious vows ! The Queen of Love
Her sister sends, her votaress from above.
As taught by Venus, Paris learn'd the art
To touch Achilles' only tender part ;
Secure, through her, the noble prize to carry,

at the same time :

' Dear Welsted, mark, in dirty hole,
That painful animal, a mole :
Above ground never born to grow,
What mighty stir it keeps below :
To make a molehill all this strife !
It digs, pokes, undermines for life.
How proud a little dirt to spread,
Conscious of nothing o'er its head !
Till labouring on, for want of eyes,
It blunders into light, and dies.'

With Shakspeare's nature, or with Jonson's art,
 Let others aim ; 'tis yours to shake the soul
 With thunder rumbling from the mustard bowl ;
 With horns and trumpets now to madness swell,
 Now sink in sorrows with a tolling bell !
 Such happy arts attention can command
 When fancy flags, and sense is at a stand.
 Improve we these. Three cat-calls be the bribe
 Of him whose chattering shames the monkey tribe ;
 And his this drum, whose hoarse heroic bass
 Drowns the loud clarion of the braying ass.'

Now thousand tongues are heard in one loud din ;
 The monkey mimics rush discordant in ; [all,
 'Twas chattering, grinning, mouthing, jabbering

REMARKS.

258 — Webster,—and Whitfield!] The one the writer of a newspaper called The Weekly Miscellany; the other a field-preacher. This thought the only means of advancing religion was by the new birth of spiritual madness; that by the old death of fire and fagot: and therefore they agreed in this, though in no other earthly thing, to abuse all the sober clergy. From the small success of these two extraordinary persons, we may learn how little hurtful bigotry and enthusiasm are, while the civil magistrate prudently forbears to lend his power to the one, in order to the employing it against the other.

'It is as great as ever entered into the mind of man.'—'In poetry he was not so happy as laborious, and is therefore characterized by the Tatler, No. 62, by the name of Omicron, the unborn poet.' Curll, Key, p. 13. 'He writ dramatic works, and a volume of poetry consisting of heroic epistles, &c. some whereof are very well done,' said that great judge, Mr. Jacob, in his Lives of Poets, vol. ii. p. 303.

In his Essay on Criticism, and the Arts of Logic and Rhetoric, he frequently reflects on our author. But the top of his character was a perverter of history, in that scandalous one of the Stuarts, in folio, and his Critical History of England, two volumes, octavo. Being employed by Bishop Kennet, in publishing the historians in his Collection, he falsified Daniel's Chronicle in numberless places. Yet this very man, in the preface to the first of these books, advanced a particular fact to charge three eminent persons of falsifying the Lord Clarendon's History; which fact has been disproved by Dr. Atterbury, late Bishop of Rochester, then the only survivor of them; and the particular part he pretended to be falsified produced since, after almost ninety years, in that noble author's original manuscript. He was all his life a virulent party-writer for hire, and received his reward in a small place which he enjoyed to his death.

REMARKS.

²⁹¹ Next Smedley div'd] In the surreptitious editions this whole episode was applied to an initial letter E—, by whom if they meant the laureate, nothing was more absurd, no part agreeing with his character. The allegory evidently demands a person dipped in scandal, and deeply immersed in dirty work; whereas Mr. Eusden's writings rarely offended but by their length and multitude, and accordingly are taxed of nothing else in book i. v. 104. But the person here mentioned, an Irishman, was author and publisher of many scurrilous pieces; a Weekly Whitehall Journal, in the year 1722, in the name of Sir James Baker, and particularly, whole volumes of Billingsgate against Dr. Swift and Mr. Pope, called Gulliveriana and Alexandriana, printed in octavo, 1728.

in his Metamorphosis of Scriblerus, p. 7, accuses him of 'having boasted of what he had not written, but others had revised and done for him.' He was author of several dull and dead scurrilities in the British and London Journals and in a paper called The Speculist. In a pamphlet, called A Supplement to the Profound, he dealt very unfairly with our poet, not only frequently imputing to him Mr. Broome's verses (for which he might indeed seem in some degree accountable, having corrected what that gentleman did), but those of the Duke of Buckingham and others: to this rare piece somebody humorously caused him to take for his motto De profundis clamavi. He was since a hired scribbler in the Daily Courant, where he poured forth much Billingsgate against the Lord Bolingbroke and others; after which, this man was surprisingly promoted to administer justice and law in Jamaica.

⁸¹⁵ Arnall] William Arnall, bred an attorney, was a perfect genius in this sort of work. He began under twenty, with furious party-papers; then succeeded Concanen in the British Journal. At the first publication of the Dunciad, he prevailed on the author not to give him his due place in it, by a letter professing his detestation of such practices as his predecessor's. But since, by the most unexampled insolence, and personal abuse of several great men, the poet's particular friends, he most amply deserved a niche in the temple of Infamy: witness a paper called the Free Briton; a Dedication entitled, To the Genuine Blunderer, 1732; and many others. He writ for hire, and valued himself upon it; not indeed without cause, it appearing that he received 'for Free Britons, and other writings, in the space of four years, no less than ten thousand nine hundred and ninety-seven pounds six shillings and eight pence out of the Treasury.' But frequently, through his fury or folly, he exceeded all the bounds of his commission, and obliged his honourable patron to disavow his scurrilities.

Vied for his love in jetty bowers below,
As Hylas fair was ravish'd long ago.

And wafting vapours from the land of dreams,

⁴¹³ Boyer the state, and Law the stage gave o'er] A. Boyer, a voluminous compiler of annals, political collections, &c. William Law, A. M. wrote with great zeal against the stage; Mr. Dennis answered with as great. Their books were printed in 1726.

BOOK III.

ARGUMENT.

After the other persons are disposed in their proper places of rest, the goddess transports the king to her temple, and there lays him to slumber with his head on her lap; a position of marvellous virtue, which causes all the visions of wild enthusiasts, projectors, politicians, inamoratos, castle-builders, chymists, and poets. He is immediately carried on the wings of fancy, and led by a mad poetical sibyl, to the Elysian shade; where, on the banks of Lethe, the souls of the dull are dipped by Bavius, before their entrance into this world. There he is met by the ghost of Settle, and by him made acquainted with the wonders of the place, and with those which he himself is destined to perform. He takes him to a mount of vision, from whence he shows him the past triumphs of the empire of Dulness; then, the present; and, lastly, the future: how small a part of the world was ever conquered by science, how soon those conquests were stopped, and these very nations again reduced to her dominion. Then distinguishing the island of Great Britain, shows by what aids, by what persons, and by what degrees, it shall be brought to her empire. Some of the persons he causes to pass in review before his eyes, describing each by his proper figure, character, and qualifications. On a sudden the scene shifts, and a vast number of miracles and prodigies appear, utterly surprising and unknown to the king himself, till they are explained to be the wonders of his own reign now commencing. On this subject Settle breaks into a congratulation, yet not unmixed with concern, that his own times were but the types of these. He prophesies how first the nation shall be overrun with farces, operas, and shows; how the throne of Dulness shall be advanced over the theatres, and set up even at court; then how her sons shall preside in the seats of arts and sciences; giving a glimpse, or Pisgah-sight, of the future fulness of her glory, the accomplishment whereof is the subject of the fourth and last book.

BUT in her temple's last recess inclos'd,
 On Dulness' lap th' anointed head repos'd.
 Him close she curtains round with vapours blue,
 And soft besprinkles with Cimmerian dew :
 Then raptures high the seat of sense o'erflow,
 Which only heads refin'd from reason know.
 Hence from the straw where Bedlam's prophet nods,⁷
 He hears loud oracles, and talks with gods ;
 Hence the fool's paradise, the statesman's scheme,
 The air-built castle, and the golden dream,
 The maid's romantic wish, the chymist's flame,
 And poet's vision of eternal fame.
 And now, on Fancy's easy wing convey'd,
 The king descending views th' Elysian shade.
 A slipshod sibyl led his steps along,¹⁵

²¹ Benlowes] A country gentleman, famous for his own bad poetry, and for patronizing bad poets, as may be seen from many dedications of Quarles and others to him. Some of these anagramed his name Benlowes into Benevolus; to verify which he spent his whole estate upon them.

REMARKS.

²⁴ Old Bavius sits] Bavius was an ancient poet, celebrated by Virgil for the like cause as Bayes by our author, though not in so Christian-like a manner: for heathenishly it is declared by Virgil of Bavius, that he ought to be hated and detested for his evil works (Qui Bavius non odit?): whereas we have often had occasion to observe our poet's great good nature and mercifulness through the whole course of this poem.

 As man's meanders to the vital spring
 Roll all their tides, then back their circles bring
 Or whirligigs, twirl'd round by skilful swain,
 Suck the thread in, then yield it out again;
 All nonsense thus, of old or modern date,
 Shall in thee centre, from thee circulate.
 For this our queen unfolds to vision true ⁶¹
 Thy mental eye, for thou hast much to view:
 Old scenes of glory, times long cast behind,
 Shall, first recall'd, rush forward to thy mind:
 Then stretch thy sight o'er all her rising reign,
 And let the past and future fire thy brain.

'Ascend this hill, whose cloudy point commands
 Her boundless empire over seas and lands.

There is a general allusion in what follows to that whole episode.

‘Far eastward cast thine eye, from whence the sun
And orient science their bright course begun :
One godlike monarch all that pride confounds,⁷⁵
He whose long wall the wandering Tartar bounds :
Heavens ! what a pile ! whole ages perish there,
And one bright blaze turns learning into air.

‘Thence to the south extend thy gladden’d eyes ;
There rival flames with equal glory rise ;
From shelves to shelves see greedy Vulcan roll,⁸¹
And lick up all their physic of the soul.

‘How little, mark ! that portion of the ball,
Where, faint at best, the beams of science fall :
Soon as they dawn, from hyperborean skies
Embodied dark, what clouds of Vandals rise !
Lo ! where Mæotis sleeps, and hardly flows
The freezing Tanais through a waste of snows,
The north by myriads pours her mighty sons,
Great nurse of Goths, of Alans, and of Huns !
See Alaric’s stern port ! the martial frame
Of Genseric ! and Attila’s dread name !
See the bold Ostrogoths on Latium fall !
See the fierce Visigoths on Spain and Gaul !
See where the morning gilds the palmy shore

He very grossly, and unprovoked, abused in that book the author’s friend, Mr. Gay.

¹⁵² Horneck—Roome] These two were virulent party writers; worthily coupled together, and one would think, prophetically; since, after the publishing of this piece, the former dying, the latter succeeded him in honour and employment. The first was Philip Horneck, author of a Billingsgate paper called The High German Doctor. Edward Roome was son of an undertaker for funerals in Fleet-street, and writ some of the papers called Pasquin, where, by malicious innuendoes, he endeavoured to represent our author guilty of malevolent practices with a great man then under ¹⁵⁵ — Ralph] James Ralph, a name inserted after the first editions, not known to our author till he writ a swearing piece called Sawney, very abusive of Dr. Swift, Mr. Gay, and himself. These lines alluded to a thing of his entitled Night, a poem. REMARKS.

²³² Not half so pleas'd when Goodman prophesied] Mr. Cibber tells us, in his life, p. 149, that Goodman, being at the rehearsal of a play, in which he had a part, clapped him on the shoulder, and cried, 'If he does not make a good actor, I'll be d——d,'—'and' (says Mr. Cibber), 'I make it a question, whether Alexander himself, or Charles the Twelfth of Sweden, when at the head of their first victorious armies, could feel a greater transport in their bosoms than I did in mine.'

²⁶⁶ ²⁶⁷ Booth and Cibber were joint managers of the Theatre in Drury Lane.

As ver. 264 is a parody on a noble one of the same author in the Campaign: and ver. 259, 260, on two sublime verses of Dr. Y.

 And every year be duller than the last;

REMARKS.

²⁸² Annual trophies, on the Lord Mayor's Day; and monthly wars, in the artillery ground.

²⁸³ Though long my party] Settle, like most party-writers, was very uncertain in his political principles. He was employed to hold the pen in the character of a Popish successor, but afterwards printed his Narrative on the other side. He had managed the ceremony of a famous Pope-burning on Nov. 17, 1680; then became a trooper in King James's army, at Hounslow-heath. After the Revolution he kept a booth at Bartholomew-fair, where, in the droll called St. George for England, he acted in his old age in a dragon of green leather of his own invention. He was at last taken into the Charter house, and there died, aged sixty years.

REMARKS.

⁸²⁵ On poets’ tombs see Benson’s titles writ] W—m Benson (Surveyor of the Buildings to his Majesty King George I.) gave in a report to the Lords, that their house and the Painted Chamber adjoining, were in immediate danger of falling; whereupon the Lords met in a committee to appoint some other place to sit in while the house should be taken down. But it being proposed to cause some other builders first to inspect it, they found it in very good condition. The Lords upon this were going upon an address to the King against Benson for such a misrepresentation; but the Earl of Sunderland, then Secretary, gave them an assurance that his Majesty would remove him, which was done accordingly. In favour of this man, the famous Sir Christopher Wren, who had been architect to the Crown for above fifty years, who built most of the churches in London, laid the first stone of St. Paul’s, and lived to finish it, had been displaced from his employment at the age of near ninety years.

'Indeed, he confesses, he dares not set him quite on the same foot with Virgil, lest it should seem flattery, but he is much mistaken if posterity does not afford him a greater esteem than he at present enjoys.' He endeavoured to create some misunderstanding between our author and Mr. Addison, whom also soon after he abused as much.

⁸³⁰ Gay dies unpension'd, &c.] See Mr. Gay's fable of the Hare and many Friends. This gentleman was early in the friendship of our author, which continued to his death. He wrote several works of humour with great success: The Shepherd's Week, Trivia, The What-d'ye-call it, Fables; and, lastly, that prodigy of fortune, the Beggar's Opera.

⁸³³ Proceed, great days! &c.—Till birch shall blush, &c.] Another great prophet of Dulness, on this side Styx, promiseth those days to be near at hand. BOOK IV.

ARGUMENT.

The poet being, in this book, to declare the completion of the prophecies mentioned at the end of the former, makes a new invocation: as the greater poets are wont, when some high and worthy matter is to be sung. He shows the goddess coming in her majesty to destroy order and science, and to substitute the kingdom of the Dull upon earth: how she leads captive the sciences, and silences the muses; and what they be who succeed in their stead. All her children, by a wonderful attraction, are drawn about her: and bear along with them divers others, who promote her empire by connivance, weak resistance, or discouragement of arts; such as half-wits, tasteless admirers, vain pretenders, the flatterers of dunces, or the patrons of them. All these crowd round her; one of them offering to approach her, is driven back by a rival, but she commends and encourages both. The first who speak in form are the geniuses of the schools, who assure her of their care to advance her cause by confining youth to words, and keeping them out of the way of real knowledge. Their address, and her gracious answer; with her charge to them and the universities. The universities appear by their proper deputies, and assure her that the same method is observed in the progress of education. The speech of Aristarchus on this subject. They are driven off by a band of young gentlemen returned from travel with their tutors; one of whom delivers to the goddess, in a polite oration, an account of the whole conduct and fruits of their travels; presenting to her at the same time a young nobleman perfectly accomplished. She receives him graciously, and endues him with the happy quality of want of shame. She sees loitering about her a number of indolent persons abandoning all business and duty, and dying with laziness: to these approaches the antiquary Annius, entreating her to make them virtuosos, and assign them over to him; but Mummius, another antiquary, complaining of his fraudulent proceeding, she finds a method to reconcile their difference. Then enter a troop of people fantastically adorned, offering her strange and exotic presents: among them, one stands forth, and demands justice on another who had deprived him of one of the greatest curiosities in nature; but he justifies himself so well, that the goddess gives them both her approbation. She recommends to them to find proper employment for the indolents before mentioned, in the study of butterflies, shells, birds-nests, moss, &c. but with particular caution not to proceed beyond trifles, to any useful or extensive views of nature, or of the Author of nature. Against the last of these apprehensions, she is secured by a hearty address from the Minute Philosophers and Freethinkers, one of whom speaks in the name of the rest. The youth thus instructed and principled, are delivered to her in a body, by the hands of Silenus; and then admitted to taste the cup of the Magus, her high priest, which causes a total oblivion of all obligations, divine, civil, moral, or rational. To these her adepts she sends priests, attendants, and comforters, of various kinds: confers on them orders and degrees; and then dismissing them with a speech, confirming to each his privileges, and telling what she expects from each, concludes with a yawn of extraordinary virtue: the progress and effects whereof on all orders of men, and the consummation of all, in the restoration of Night and Chaos, conclude the poem.

Yet, yet a moment, one dim ray of light
Indulge, dread Chaos, and eternal Night!²
Of darkness visible so much be lent,
As half to show, half veil the deep intent.

REMARKS.

² — dread Chaos and eternal Night] Invoked, as the restoration of their empire is the action of the poem.

Ye powers! whose mysteries restor'd I sing,
 To whom Time bears me on his rapid wing,
 Suspend a while your force inertly strong,
 Then take at once the poet and the song.

Now flam'd the dogstar's unpropitious ray,
 Smote every brain, and wither'd every bay;
 Sick was the sun, the owl forsook his bower,
 The moon-struck prophet felt the madding hour:
 Then rose the seed of Chaos, and of Night,
 To blot out order, and extinguish light,¹⁴
 Of dull and venal a new world to mould,¹⁵
 And bring Saturnian days of lead and gold.

She mounts the throne: her head a cloud
 conceal'd,
 In broad effulgence all below reveal'd
 ('Tis thus aspiring Dulness ever shines);
 Soft on her lap her laureate son reclines.

REMARKS.

¹⁴ To blot out order, and extinguish light] The two great ends of her mission; the one in quality of daughter of Chaos, the other as daughter of Night. Order here is to be understood extensively, both as civil and moral; the distinctions between high and low in society, and true and false in individuals: light as intellectual only; wit, science, arts.

¹⁵ Of dull and venal] The allegory continued; dull referring to the extinction of light or science; venal to the destruction of order and the truth of things.

¹⁶ —a new world] In allusion to the Epicurean opinion, that from the dissolution of the natural world into night and chaos, a new one should arise; this the poet alluding to, in the production of a new world, makes it partake of its original principles.

Beneath her footstool Science groans in chains,
 And Wit dreads exile, penalties, and pains.
 There foam'd rebellious Logic, gagg'd and bound;
 There, stript, fair Rhetoric languish'd on the ground;

His blunted arms by Sophistry are borne,
 And shameless Billingsgate her robes adorn.
 Morality, by her false guardians drawn,
 Chicane in furs, and Casuistry in lawn,
 Gasps, as they straiten at each end the cord,
 And dies when Dulness gives her Page the word.⁸⁰
 Mad Mathesis alone was unconfin'd,⁸¹
 Too mad for mere material chains to bind,
 Now to pure space lifts her ecstatic stare,
 Now running round the circle, finds it square.
 But held in tenfold bonds the Muses lie,
 Watch'd both by envy's and by flattery's eye.
 There to her heart sad Tragedy address
 The dagger, wont to pierce the tyrant's breast;
 But sober History restrain'd her rage,
 And promis'd vengeance on a barbarous age.
 There sunk Thalia, nerveless, cold, and dead,
 Had not her sister Satire held her head:
 Nor couldst thou, Chesterfield! a tear refuse,
 Thou wept'st, and with thee wept each gentle Muse

REMARKS.

⁸⁰ Page] There was a judge of this name, always ready to hang any man that came in his way.

⁸¹ Mad Mathesis] Alluding to the strange conclusions some mathematicians have deduced from their principles, concerning the real quantity of matter, the reality of space, &c.

When lo! a harlot form soft sliding by,⁴⁵
 With mincing step, small voice, and languid eye;
 Foreign her air, her robe's discordant pride
 In patchwork fluttering, and her head aside;
 By singing peers upheld on either hand,
 She tripp'd and laugh'd, too pretty much to stand;
 Cast on the prostrate Nine a scornful look,
 Then thus in quaint recitativo spoke:

‘O cara! cara! silence all that train!
 Joy to great Chaos! let division reign!⁵⁴
 Chromatic tortures soon shall drive them hence,
 Break all their nerves, and fritter all their sense:
 One trill shall harmonize joy, grief, and rage,
 Wake the dull church, and lull the ranting stage;
 To the same notes thy sons shall hum, or snore,
 And all thy yawning daughters cry encore.
 Another Phœbus, thy own Phœbus, reigns,
 Joys in my jigs, and dances in my chains.
 But soon, ah, soon, rebellion will commence,
 If music meanly borrows aid from sense:
 Strong in new arms, lo! giant Handel stands,
 Like bold Briareus, with a hundred hands;

REMARKS.

⁴⁵ When lo! a harlot form] The attitude given to this phantom represents the nature and genius of the Italian Opera.

IMITATIONS.

⁵⁴ Joy to great Chaos]

‘Joy to great Cæsar!’

The beginning of a famous old song.

To stir, to rouse, to shake the soul he comes,
And Jove's own thunders follow Mars's drums.
Arrest him, empress, or you sleep no more'——
She heard, and drove him to th' Hibernian shore.⁷⁰

And now had Fame's posterior trumpet blown,
And all the nations summon'd to the throne :
The young, the old, who feel her inward sway,
One instinct seizes, and transports away.
None need a guide, by sure attraction led,
And strong impulsive gravity of head :
None want a place, for all their centre found,
Hung to the goddess, and coher'd around.
Not closer, orb in orb, conglob'd are seen
The buzzing bees about their dusky queen.

The gathering number, as it moves along,
Involves a vast involuntary throng,
Who gently drawn, and struggling less and less,
Roll in her vortex, and her power confess.
Not those alone who passive own her laws,
But who, weak rebels, more advance her cause :
Whate'er of dunce in college or in town
Sneers at another, in toupee or gown ;
Whate'er of mongrel no one class admits,
A wit with dunces, and a dunce with wits.

Nor absent they, no members of her state,
Who pay her homage in her sons, the great ;

REMARKS.

⁷⁰ Drove him to th' Hibernian shore] Handel's Messiah was first performed in Dublin, the great composer having in vain endeavoured to get it produced in London.

Who false to Phœbus, bow the knee to Baal,
 Or impious, preach his word without a call:
 Patrons, who sneak from living worth to dead,
 Withhold the pension, and set up the head;
 Or vest dull flattery in the sacred gown,
 Or give from fool to fool the laurel crown;
 And (last and worst) with all the cant of wit,
 Without the soul, the Muse's hypocrite.

There march'd the bard and blockhead side by side,

Who rhym'd for hire, and patroniz'd for pride.
 Narcissus, prais'd with all a parson's power,¹⁰³
 Look'd a white lily sunk beneath a shower.
 There mov'd Montalto with superior air;¹⁰⁵
 His stretch'd out arm display'd a volume fair;
 Courtiers and patriots in two ranks divide,
 Through both he pass'd, and bow'd from side to side;
 But as in graceful act, with awful eye,
 Compos'd he stood, bold Benson thrust him by:¹¹⁰

REMARKS.

¹⁰³ Narcissus, prais'd, &c.] Alluding to Dr. Middleton's laboured encomium on Lord Hervey, in his dedication of the Life of Cicero.

¹⁰⁵ Montalto] Sir Thomas Hanmer. Verses 115, 116, 117, 118, allude to his edition of Shakspeare coming from the Oxford press.

¹¹⁰ Benson] This man endeavoured to raise himself to fame by erecting monuments, striking coins, setting up heads, and procuring translations, of Milton; and afterwards by as great passion for one Arthur Johnston's (a Scotch physician) Version of the Psalms, of which he printed many fine editions.

On two unequal crutches propt he came,
 Milton's on this, on that one Johnston's name.
 The decent knight retir'd with sober rage,
 Withdrew his hand, and clos'd the pompous page:
 But (happy for him as the times went then)
 Appear'd Apollo's mayor and aldermen,
 On whom three hundred gold-capp'd youths await,
 To lug the ponderous volume off in state.

When Dulness, smiling—'Thus revive the wits!
 But murder first, and mince them all to bits;
 As erst Medea (cruel, so to save!)
 A new edition of old Æson gave;
 Let standard authors thus, like trophies borne,
 Appear more glorious as more hack'd and torn.
 And you, my critics! in the chequer'd shade,
 Admire new light through holes yourselves have made.¹²⁶

Leave not a foot of verse, a foot of stone,
 A page, a grave, that they can call their own;
 But spread, my sons, your glory thin or thick,
 On passive paper, or on solid brick.
 So by each bard an alderman shall sit,¹⁸¹
 A heavy lord shall hang at every wit,

WALLER.

And while on Fame's triumphal car they ride,
Some slave of mine be pinion'd to their side.'

Now crowds on crowds around the goddess press,
Each eager to present the first address.

Dunce scorning dunce beholds the next advance,
But fop shows fop superior complaisance.

When lo! a spectre rose, whose index hand
Held forth the virtue of the dreadful wand;
His beaver'd brow a birchen garland wears,
Dropping with infants' blood and mothers' tears.¹⁴²

O'er every vein a shuddering horror runs,
Eton and Winton shake through all their sons.

All flesh is humbled, Westminster's bold race
Shrink, and confess the Genius of the place:

The pale boy-senator yet tingling stands,
And holds his breeches close with both his hands.

Then thus: 'Since man from beast by words

Words are man's province, words we teach alone.

MILTON.

We never suffer it to stand too wide.
To ask, to guess, to know, as they commence,
As fancy opens the quick springs of sense,
We ply the memory, we load the brain,
Bind rebel wit, and double chain on chain,
Confine the thought, to exercise the breath,
And keep them in the pale of words till death.
Whate'er the talents, or howe'er design'd,
We hang one jingling padlock on the mind:
A poet the first day he dips his quill;
And what the last? a very poet still.
Pity! the charm works only in our wall,
Lost, lost too soon in yonder house or hall.
There truant Wyndham every muse gave o'er,
There Talbot sunk, and was a wit no more!
How sweet an Ovid, Murray was our boast!
How many Martials were in Pulteney lost!
Else sure some bard, to our eternal praise,
In twice ten thousand rhyming nights and days,
Had reach'd the work, the all that mortal can,
And South beheld that masterpiece of man.¹⁷⁴

‘O (cried the goddess) for some pedant reign!
Some gentle James, to bless the land again:
To stick the doctor’s chair into the throne,
Give law to words, or war with words alone,
Senates and courts with Greek and Latin rule,

REMARKS.

¹⁷⁴ —[that masterpiece of man] Viz. an epigram. The famous Dr. South used to declare that a perfect epigram was as difficult a performance as an epic poem.

And turn the council to a grammar school !
 For sure if Dulness sees a grateful day,
 'Tis in the shade of arbitrary sway.
 O ! if my sons may learn one earthly thing,
 Teach but that one, sufficient for a king ;
 That which my priests, and mine alone, maintain,
 Which, as it dies, or lives, we fall, or reign :
 May you, may Cam, and Isis, preach it long !
 “ The right divine of kings to govern wrong.”

Prompt at the call, around the goddess roll
 Broad hats, and hoods, and caps, a sable shoal :
 Thick and more thick the black blockade extends,
 A hundred head of Aristotle's friends.
 Nor wert thou, Isis ! wanting to the day
 [Though Christ Church long kept prudishly away] :
 Each stanch polemic, stubborn as a rock,
 Each fierce logician, still expelling Locke,¹⁹⁶ Came whip and spur, and dash'd through thin and thick,
 On German Crousaz, and Dutch Burgersdyck.¹⁹⁸
 As many quit the streams that murmuring fall
 To lull the sons of Margaret and Clare Hall,

REMARKS.

¹⁹⁶ still expelling Locke] In the year 1703 there was a meeting of the heads of the University of Oxford to censure Mr. Locke's Essay on Human Understanding, and to forbid the reading of it. See his Letters in the last edition of his works.

Are things which Kuster, Burman, Wasse shall see,
When man's whole frame is obvious to a flea.

‘Ah, think not, mistress! more true dulness lies
In folly's cap, than wisdom's grave disguise.
Like buoys, that never sink into the flood,
On learning's surface we but lie and nod.
Thine is the genuine head of many a house,
And much divinity without a voûs.
Nor could a Barrow work on every block,²⁴⁵
Nor has one Atterbury spoil'd the flock!
See! still thy own, the heavy canon roll,
And metaphysic smokes involve the pole.
For thee we dim the eyes, and stuff the head
With all such reading as was never read:
For thee explain a thing till all men doubt it,
And write about it, goddess, and about it:
So spins the silkworm small its slender store,
And labours till it clouds itself all o'er.

‘What though we let some better sort of fool
Thrid every science, run through every school?
Never by tumbler through the hoops was shown
Such skill in passing all, and touching none.
He may indeed (if sober all this time)
Plague with dispute, or persecute with rhyme.

REMARKS.

²⁴⁵ ²⁴⁶ Barrow—Atterbury] Isaac Barrow, Master of Trinity—Francis Atterbury, Dean of Christ Church; both great geniuses and eloquent preachers; one more conversant in the sublime geometry, the other in classical learning; but who equally made it their care to advance the polite arts in their several societies.

 Or, set on metaphysic ground to prance,
 Show all his paces, not a step advance.
 With the same cement, ever sure to bind,
 We bring to one dead level every mind :
 Then take him to develop, if you can,
 And hew the block off, and get out the man.

 Each with some wondrous gift approach'd the power,
 A nest, a toad, a fungus, or a flower.

But far the foremost two, with earnest zeal
 And aspect ardent, to the throne appeal.

The first thus open'd : ' Hear thy suppliant's call,
 Great queen, and common mother of us all !
 Fair from its humble bed I rear'd this flower, ⁴⁰⁵
 Suckled, and cheer'd, with air, and sun, and shower.

REMARKS.

⁸⁹⁴ Douglas] A physician of great learning, and no less taste; above all, curious in what related to Horace; of whom he collected every edition, translation, and comment, to the number of several hundred volumes.

IMITATIONS.

⁴⁰⁵ &c. Fair from its humble bed, &c.— —*nam'd it Caroline !
 Each maid cried, charming ! and each youth, divine !
 Now prostrate ! dead ! behold that Caroline :
 No maid cries charming ! and no youth divine !*]

These verses are translated from Catullus, Epith.

' Ut flos in septis secretus nascitur hortis,
 Quem mulcent auræ, firmat Sol, educat imber,
 Multi illum pueri, multæ optavere puellæ:
 Idem quum tenui carptus defloruit ungui,
 Nulli illum pueri, nullæ optavere puellæ.' &c.

Soft on the paper ruff its leaves I spread,
 Bright with the gilded button tipp'd its head,
 Then thron'd in glass, and nam'd it Caroline. ⁴⁰⁹
 Each maid cried, charming! and each youth, divine!
 Did Nature's pencil ever blend such rays,
 Such varied light in one promiscuous blaze?
 Now prostrate! dead! behold that Caroline:
 No maid cries, charming! and no youth, divine!
 And lo the wretch! whose vile, whose insect lust
 Laid this gay daughter of the spring in dust.
 O punish him, or to th' Elysian shades
 Dismiss my soul, where no carnation fades.'
 He ceas'd, and wept. With innocence of mien
 Th' accus'd stood forth, and thus address'd the queen:

'Of all th' enamell'd race, whose silvery wing⁴²¹
 Waves to the tepid zephyrs of the spring,

REMARKS.

⁴⁰⁹ nam'd it Caroline] It is a compliment which the florists usually pay to princes and great personages, to give their names to the most curious flowers of their raising. Some have been very jealous of vindicating this honour; but none more than that ambitious gardener at Hammersmith, who caused his favourite to be painted on his sign, with this inscription, 'This is my Queen Caroline.'

IMITATIONS.

⁴²¹ Of all th' enamell'd race] The poet seems to have an eye to Spenser, Muipotmos.

'Of all the race of silver-winged flies
 Which do possess the empire of the air.'

Or swims along the fluid atmosphere,
 Once brightest shin'd this child of heat and air.
 I saw, and started from its vernal bower
 The rising game, and chas'd from flower to flower.
 It fled, I follow'd ; now in hope, now pain ; ⁴²⁷
 It stopt, I stopt ; it mov'd, I mov'd again.
 At last it fix'd, 'twas on what plant it pleas'd,
 And where it fix'd the beauteous bird I seiz'd :
 Rose or carnation was below my care ;
 I meddle, goddess ! only in my sphere.
 I tell the naked fact without disguise,
 And, to excuse it, need but show the prize ;
 Whose spoils this paper offers to your eye,
 Fair e'en in death, this peerless butterfly !

‘ My sons ! (she answer'd) both have done your parts :

Live happy both, and long promote our arts.
 But hear a mother when she recommends
 To your fraternal care our sleeping friends.
 The common soul, of Heaven's more frugal make,
 Serves but to keep fools pert, and knaves awake ;
 A drowsy watchman, that just gives a knock,
 And breaks our rest, to tell us what's o'clock.
 Yet by some object every brain is stirr'd ;
 The dull may waken to a humming-bird ;

IMITATIONS.

⁴²⁷ ⁴²⁸ It fled, I follow'd, &c.]

‘ — I started back ;

It started back ; but pleas'd I soon return'd ;

Pleas'd it return'd as soon.’

MILTON.

The most recluse, discreetly open'd, find
Congenial matter in the cockle kind;
The mind, in metaphysics at a loss,
May wander in a wilderness of moss;
The head that turns at superlunar things,
Pois'd with a tail, may steer on Wilkins' wings.⁴⁵²

'O! would the sons of men once think their eyes
And reason given them but to study flies!
See Nature in some partial narrow shape,
And let the Author of the whole escape:
Learn but to trifle; or, who most observe,
To wonder at their Maker, not to serve!'

'Be that my task (replies a gloomy clerk,
Sworn foe to mystery, yet divinely dark;
Whose pious hope aspires to see the day
When moral evidence shall quite decay,
And damns implicit faith, and holy lies;
Prompt to impose, and fond to dogmatize):
Let others creep by timid steps, and slow,
On plain experience lay foundations low,
By common sense to common knowledge bred,
And last, to nature's cause through nature led.
All-seeing in thy mists, we want no guide,
Mother of arrogance, and source of pride!

REMARKS.

⁴⁵² Wilkins' wings] One of the first projectors of the Royal Society, who, among many enlarged and useful notions, entertained the extravagant hope of a possibility to fly to the moon; which has put some volatile geniuses upon making wings for that purpose.

We nobly take the high priori road,⁴⁷¹
 And reason downward, till we doubt of God :
 Make nature still encroach upon his plan,
 And shove him off as far as e'er we can :
 Thrust some mechanic cause into his place,
 Or bind in matter, or diffuse in space :
 Or, at one bound o'erleaping all his laws,
 Make God man's image ; man, the final cause ;
 Find virtue local, all relation scorn,
 See all in self, and but for self be born :
 Of nought so certain as our reason still,
 Of nought so doubtful as of soul and will.
 O hide the God still more ! and make us see
 Such as Lucretius drew, a God like thee :
 Wrapt up in self, a God without a thought,
 Regardless of our merit or default.
 Or that bright image to our fancy draw,
 Which Theocles in raptur'd vision saw,⁴⁸⁸
 While through poetic scenes the genius roves,
 Or wanders wild in academic groves ;
 That Nature our society adores,
 Where Tindal dictates, and Silenus snores !⁴⁹²

REMARKS.

⁴⁷¹ the high priori road] Said to be an oblique censure of Dr. Clarke's-famous Demonstration of the Being and Attributes of God.

⁴⁸⁸ Theocles] Shaftesbury.

⁴⁹² Silenus] Silenus was an Epicurean philosopher, as appears from Virgil, Ecl. vi. where he sings the principles of that philosophy in his drink.

By Silenus was meant Mr. Thomas Gordon, who translated Tacitus in an affected hard manner.

Rous'd at his name, up rose the bowzy sire,
 And shook from out his pipe the seeds of fire;
 Then snapt his box, and strok'd his belly down;
 Rosy and reverend, though without a gown.
 Bland and familiar to the throne he came,
 Led up the youth, and call'd the goddess Dame.
 Then thus: 'From priestcraft happily set free,
 Lo! every finish'd son returns to thee:
 First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
 Then dupe to party; child and man the same;
 Bounded by nature, narrow'd still by art,
 A trifling head, and a contracted heart.
 Thus bred, thus taught, how many have I seen,
 Smiling on all, and smil'd on by a queen!⁵⁰⁶
 Mark'd out for honours, honour'd for their birth,
 To thee the most rebellious things on earth:
 Now to thy gentle shadow all are 'shrunk,
 All melted down in pension or in punk!
 So K*, so B sneak'd into the grave,
 A monarch's half, and half a harlot's slave.
 Poor W nipt in folly's broadest bloom,⁵¹⁸
 Who praises now? his chaplain on his tomb.
 Then take them all, O take them to thy breast!
 Thy Magus, goddess! shall perform the rest.'
 With that a wizard old his cup extends,⁵¹⁷

REMARKS.

⁵⁰⁶ a queen] A stroke of satire on Queen Caroline.

⁵¹⁸ *Poor W] Philip, Duke of Wharton.

⁵¹⁷ —his cup—Which whoso tastes, &c.] The cup of self-love, which causes a total oblivion of the obligations of friendship or honour, and of the service of God or our country;

Which whoso tastes, forgets his former friends,⁵¹⁸
 Sire, ancestors, himself. One casts his eyes
 Up to a star, and like Endymion dies :
 A feather, shooting from another's head,
 Extracts his brain, and principle is fled ;
 Lost is his God, his country, every thing,
 And nothing left but homage to a king !
 The vulgar herd turn off to roll with hogs,
 To run with horses, or to hunt with dogs ;
 But, sad example ! never to escape
 Their infamy, still keep the human shape.

But she, good goddess, sent to every child
 Firm impudence, or stupefaction mild ;
 And straight succeeded, leaving shame no room,
 Cibberian forehead, or Cimmerian gloom.

Kind Self-conceit to some her glass applies,
 Which no one looks in with another's eyes :
 But as the flatterer or dependant paint,
 Beholds himself a patriot, chief, or saint.

On others Interest her gay livery flings,
 Interest, that waves on party-colour'd wings :
 Turn'd to the sun, she casts a thousand dyes,
 And, as she turns, the colours fall or rise.

REMARKS.

all sacrificed to vainglory, court worship, or the yet meaner considerations of lucre and brutal pleasures. From ver. 526 to 528.

IMITATIONS.

- 518 Which whoso tastes, forgets his former friends, Sire, &c.] Homer of the Nepenthe, Odyss. iv.
 Αὐτίκ' ἄρ' εἰς οἶνον βάλε φάρμακον, ἐνθεν ἔπινον,
 Νηπενθές τ' ἀχολόν τε, κακῶν ἐπίληθον ἀπάντων.

Others the Syren Sisters warble round,
 And empty heads console with empty sound.
 No more, alas! the voice of fame they hear,
 The balm of dulness trickling in their ear.
 Great C, H, P, R, K*,
 Why all your toils? your sons have learn'd to sing
 How quick ambition hastes to ridicule:
 The sire is made a peer, the son a fool.

On some, a priest succinct in amice white
 Attends; all flesh is nothing in his sight!
 Beeves, at his touch, at once to jelly turn,
 And the huge boar is shrunk into an urn:
 The board with specious miracles he loads,
 Turns hares to larks, and pigeons into toads.
 Another (for in all what one can shine?)
 Explains the sève and verdeur of the vine.⁵⁵⁶
 What cannot copious sacrifice atone?
 Thy truffles, Perigord, thy hams, Bayonne,
 With French libation, and Italian strain,
 Wash Bladen white, and expiate Hays's stain.⁵⁶⁰
 Knight lifts the head; for, what are crowds undone,
 To three essential partridges in one?

REMARKS.

⁵⁵⁶ Sève and verdeur] French terms relating to wines, which signify their flavour and poignancy.

⁵⁶⁰ —Bladen—Hays] Names of gamesters. Bladen is a black man.—Robert Knight, Cashier of the South Sea Company, who fled from England in 1720 (afterwards pardoned in 1742). These lived with the utmost magnificence at Paris, and kept open tables frequented by persons of the first quality of England, and even by princes of the blood of France.

Colonel Martin Bladen (uncle of Collins the poet) was a man of some literature, and translated Cæsar's Commentaries

Gone every blush, and silent all reproach,
Contending princes mount them in their coach.

Next bidding all draw near on bended knees,
The queen confers her titles and degrees.
Her children first of more distinguish'd sort,
Who study Shakspeare at the Inns of Court,
Impale a glow-worm, or virtù profess,
Shine in the dignity of F. R. S.
Some, deep freemasons, join the silent race,
Worthy to fill Pythagoras's place :
Some botanists, or florists at the least,
Or issue members of an annual feast.
Nor past the meanest unregarded ; one
Rose a Gregorian, one a Gormogon.
The last, not least in honour or applause,
Isis and Cam made doctors of her laws.

Then, blessing all, ' Go, children of my care !
To practice now from theory repair.
All my commands are easy, short, and full :
My sons ! be proud, be selfish, and be dull.
Guard my prerogative, assert my throne :
This nod confirms each privilege your own.
The cap and switch be sacred to His Grace ;
With staff and pumps the marquis leads the race ;
From stage to stage the licens'd earl may run,
Pair'd with his fellow charioteer, the sun ;
The learned baron butterflies design,
Or draw to silk Arachne's subtle line ;
The judge to dance his brother sergeant call :
The senator at cricket urge the ball :

The bishop, stow (pontific luxury !)
A hundred souls of turkeys in a pie ;
The sturdy squire to Gallic masters stoop,
And drown his lands and manors in a soup.
Others import yet nobler arts from France,
Teach kings to fiddle, and make senates dance.
Perhaps more high some daring son may soar,
Proud to my list to add one monarch more ;
And nobly-conscious, princes are but things
Born for first ministers, as slaves for kings,
Tyrant supreme ! shall three estates command,
And make one mighty Dunciad of the land !'

More she had spoke, but yawn'd—All nature
What mortal can resist the yawn of gods ? [nods ;
Churches and chapels instantly it reach'd
(St. James's first, for leaden Gilbert preach'd) ;⁶⁰⁸
Then catch'd the Schools ; the Hall scarce kept awake ;

The Convocation gap'd, but could not speak.
Lost was the nation's sense, nor could be found,
While the long solemn unison went round :
Wide, and more wide, it spread o'er all the realm ;
E'en Palinurus nodded at the helm :
The vapour mild o'er each committee crept ;
Unfinish'd treaties in each office slept ;
And chiefless armies doz'd out the campaign ;
And navies yawn'd for orders on the main.

REMARKS.

⁶⁰⁸ Gilbert] Dr. Gilbert, Archbishop of York, who had attacked Dr. King of Oxford, whom Pope much respected.

O Muse ! relate (for you can tell alone,
 Wits have short memories, and dunces none),
 Relate who first, who last, resign'd to rest ;⁶²¹
 Whose heads she partly, whose completely blest ;
 What charms could faction, what ambition lull,
 The venal quiet, and entrance the dull, [wrong ;
 Till drown'd was sense, and shame, and right, and
 O sing, and hush the nations with thy song !

* * * * *

In vain, in vain—the all-composing hour
 Resistless falls ; the Muse obeys the power.
 She comes ! she comes ! the sable throne behold
 Of Night primeval, and of Chaos old !
 Before her Fancy's gilded clouds decay,
 And all its varying rainbows die away.
 Wit shoots in vain its momentary fires,
 The meteor drops, and in a flash expires.
 As one by one, at dread Medea's strain,
 The sickening stars fade off th' ethereal plain ;
 As Argus' eyes, by Hermes' wand oppress,⁶³⁷
 Clos'd one by one to everlasting rest ;

IMITATIONS.

⁶²¹ *Relate who first, who last, resign'd to rest :
 Whose heads she partly, whose completely blest]*
 'Quem telo primum, quem postremum, aspera Virgo,
 Dejicis ? aut quot humi morientia corpora fundis ?'

VIRG.

⁶³⁷ As Argus' eyes,' &c.]

'Et quamvis sopor est oculorum parte receptus,
 Parte tamen vigilat ——
 ——Vidit Cyllenius omnes
 Succubuisse oculos,' &c.

OVID. MET. I.

Thus at her felt approach, and secret might,
Art after Art goes out, and all is night.
See skulking Truth to her old cavern fled,
Mountains of casuistry heap'd o'er her head :
Philosophy, that lean'd on Heaven before,
Shrinks to her second cause, and is no more.
Physic of Metaphysic begs defence,
And Metaphysic calls for aid on Sense !
See Mystery to Mathematics fly !
In vain ! they gaze, turn giddy, rave, and die.
Religion, blushing, veils her sacred fires,
And unawares Morality expires.
Nor public flame, nor private, dares to shine ;
Nor human spark is left, nor glimpse divine :
Lo ! thy dread empire, Chaos ! is restor'd ;
Light dies before thy uncreating word :
Thy hand, great Anarch ! lets the curtain fall ;
And universal darkness buries all.

THE END.

THE POETICAL WORKS
OF
WILLIAM COLLINS.

MEMOIR OF COLLINS.

“ A Bard,
Who touched the tenderest notes of Pity’s lyre.”
HAYLEY.

No one can have reflected on the history of genius without being impressed with a melancholy feeling at the obscurity in which the lives of the poets of our country are, with few exceptions, involved. That they lived, and wrote, and died, comprises nearly all that is known of many, and, of others, the few facts which are preserved are often records of privations, or sufferings, or errors. The cause of the lamentable deficiency of materials for literary biography may, without difficulty, be explained. The lives of authors are seldom marked by events of an unusual character; and they rarely leave behind them the most interesting work a writer could compose, and which would embrace nearly all the important facts in his career, a “History of his Books,” containing the motives which produced them, the various incidents respecting their progress, and a faithful account of the bitter disappointment, whether the object was fame or profit, or both, which, in most instances, is the result of his labours. Various motives deter men from writing such a volume; for, though quacks and charlatans readily become auto-biographers, and fill their prefaces with their personal concerns, real merit shrinks from such disgusting egotism, and, flying to the opposite extreme, leaves no authentic notice of their struggles, its hopes, or its disappointments. Nor is the history of writers to be expected from their contemporaries; because few will venture to anticipate the judgment of posterity, and mankind are usually so isolated in self, and so jealous of others, that neither time nor inclination admits of their becoming the Boswells of all those whose productions excite admiration.

If these remarks be true, surprise cannot be felt, though there is abundance of cause for regret, that little is known of a poet whose merits were not appreciated until after his decease: whose powers were destroyed by a distressing malady at a period of life when literary exertions begin to be rewarded and stimulated by popular applause.

For the facts contained in the following Memoir of Collins, the author is indebted to the researches of others, as his own, which were very extensive, were rewarded by trifling discoveries. Dr. Johnson's Life is well known; but the praise of collecting every particular which industry and zeal could glean belongs to the Rev. Alexander Dyce, the result of whose inquiries may be found in his notes to Johnson's Memoir, prefixed to an edition of Collins's works which he lately edited. Those notices are now, for the first time, wove into a Memoir of Collins; and in leaving it to another to erect a fabric out of the materials which he has collected instead of being himself the architect, Mr. Dyce has evinced a degree of modesty which those who know him must greatly lament.

WILLIAM COLLINS was born at Chichester, on the 25th of December, 1721, and was baptized in the parish church of St. Peter the Great, alias Subdeanery in that city, on the first of the following January. He was the son of William Collins, who was then the Mayor of Chichester, where he exercised the trade of a hatter, and lived in a respectable manner. His mother was Elizabeth, the sister of a Colonel Martyn, to whose bounty the poet was deeply indebted.

Being destined for the church, young Collins was admitted a scholar of Winchester College on the 19th of January, 1733, where he was educated by Dr. Burton; and in 1740 he stood first on the list of scholars who were to be received at

New College. No vacancy, however, occurred, and the circumstance is said by Johnson to have been the original misfortune of his life. He became a commoner of Queen's,* whence, on the 29th of July, 1741, he was elected a demy of Magdalen College. During his stay at Queen's he was distinguished for genius and indolence, and the few exercises which he could be induced to write bear evident marks of both qualities. He continued at Oxford until he took his bachelor's degree, and then suddenly left the University, his motive, as he alleged, being that he missed a fellowship, for which he offered himself; but it has been assigned to his disgust at the dulness of a college life, and to his being involved in debt.

On arriving in London, which was either in 1743 or 1744, he became, says Johnson, "a literary adventurer, with many projects in his head and very little money in his pocket." Collins was not without some reputation as an author when he proposed to adopt the most uncertain and deplorable of all professions, that of literature, for a subsistence. Whilst at Winchester school he wrote his Eclogues, and had appeared before the public in some verses addressed to a lady weeping at her sister's marriage, which were printed in the Gentleman's Magazine, Oct. 1739, when Collins was in his eighteenth year. In January, 1742, he published his Eclogues, under the title of

* 21st March, 1740.

"Persian Eclogues;"* and, in December, 1743, his "Verses to Sir Thomas Hanmer on his Edition of Shakespeare," appeared. To neither did he affix his name, but the latter was said to be by "a Gentleman of Oxford."

From the time he settled in London, his mind was more occupied with literary projects than with steady application; nor had poesy, for which Nature peculiarly designed him, sufficient attractions to chain his wavering disposition. It is not certain whether his irresolution arose from the annoyance of importunate debtors, or from an original infirmity of mind, or from these causes united. A popular writer† has defended Collins from the charge of irresolution, on the ground that it was but "the vacillations of a mind broken and confounded;" and he urges, that "he had exercised too constantly the highest faculties of fiction, and precipitated himself into the dreariness of real life." But this explanation does not account for the want of steadiness which prevented Collins from accomplishing the objects he meditated. His mind was neither "broken nor confounded," nor had he experienced the bitter pangs of neglect, when with the buoyancy of hope, and a full confidence in his extraordinary powers, he threw himself on the town, at the age of twenty-three, intending to live by the exercise of his talents; but his indecision was then as apparent as at any subsequent period, so that, in truth, the effect preceded the cause to which it has been assigned.

Mankind are becoming too much accustomed to witness splendid talents and great firmness of mind united in the same person to partake the mistaken sympathy which so many writers evince for the follies or vices of genius; nor will it much longer tolerate the opinion, that the possession of the finest imagination, or the highest poetic capacity, must necessarily be accompanied by eccentricity. It may, indeed, be difficult to convert a poetical temperament into a merchant, or to make the man who is destined to delight or astonish mankind by his conceptions, sit quietly over a ledger; but the transition from poetry to the composition of such works as Collins planned is by no means unnatural, and the abandonment of his views respecting them must, in justice to his memory, be attributed to a different cause.

The most probable reason is, that these works were mere speculations to raise money, and that the idea was not encouraged by the booksellers; but if, as Johnson, who knew Collins well, asserts, his character wanted decision and perseverance, these defects may have been constitutional, and were, perhaps, the germs of the disease which too soon ripened into the most frightful of human calamities. Endued with a morbid sensibility, which was as ill calculated to court popularity as to bear neglect; and wanting that stoical indifference to the opinions of the many, which ought to render those who are conscious of the value of their productions satisfied with the approbation of the few; Collins was too impatient of applause, and too anxious to attain perfection, to be a voluminous writer. To plan much rather than to execute any thing; to commence to-day an ode, to-morrow a tragedy, and to turn on the following morning to a different subject, was the chief occupation of his life for several years, during which time he destroyed the principal part of the little that he wrote. To a man nearly penniless, such a life must be attended by privations and danger; and he was in the hands of bailiffs, possibly not for the first time, very shortly before he became independent by the death of his maternal uncle, Colonel Martyn. The result proved that his want of firmness and perseverance was natural, and did not arise from the uncertainty or narrowness of his fortune; for being rescued from imprisonment, on the credit of a translation of Aristotle's Poetics, which he engaged to furnish a publisher, a work, it may be presumed, peculiarly suited to his genius, he no sooner found himself in the possession of money by the death of his relative, than he repaid the bookseller, and abandoned the translation for ever.

From the commencement of his career, Collins was, however, an object for sympathy instead of censure; and though few refuse their compassion to the confirmed lunatic, it is rare that the dreadful state of irresolution and misery, which sometimes exist for years before the fatal catastrophe, receives either pity or indulgence.

In 1747, Collins published his Odes, to the unrivaled splendour of a few of which he is alone indebted for his fame; but neither fame nor profit was the immediate result; and the author of the Ode on the Passions had little reason to expect, from its reception by the public, that it was destined to live as long as the passions themselves animate or distract the world.

It is uncertain at what time he undertook to publish a volume of Odes in conjunction with Joseph Warton, but the intention is placed beyond dispute by the following letter from Warton to his brother. It is without a date, but it must have been written before the publication of Collins's Odes in 1747, and before the appearance of Dodsley's Museum, as it is evident the Ode to a Lady on the Death of Colonel Ross, which was inserted in that work, was not then in print.

* June 7th, 1746.

“DEAR TOM,

“YOU will wonder to see my name in an advertisement next week, so I thought I would apprise you of it. The case was this. Collins met me in Surrey, at Guildford races, when I wrote out for him my odes, and he likewise communicated some of his to me; and being both in very high spirits, we took courage, resolved to join our forces, and to publish them immediately. I flatter myself that I shall lose no honor by this publication, because I believe these odes, as they now stand, are infinitely the best things I ever wrote. You will see a very pretty one of Collins’s, on the Death of Colonel Ross before Tournay. It is addressed to a lady who was Ross’s intimate acquaintance, and who, by the way, is Miss Bett Goddard. Collins is not to publish the odes unless he gets ten guineas for them. I returned from Milford last night, where I left Collins with my mother and sister, and he sets out to-day for London. I must now tell you, that I have sent him your imitation of Horace’s Blandusian Fountain, to be printed amongst ours, and which you shall own or not, as you think proper. I would not have done this without your consent, but because I think it very poetically and correctly done, and will get you honour. You will let me know what the Oxford critics say. Adieu, dear Tom,

“I am your most affectionate brother,

“J. WARTON.”

Like so many of Collins's projects this was not executed ; but the reason of its failure is unknown.

On the death of Thomson, in August, 1748, Collins wrote an ode to his memory, which is no less remarkable for its beauty as a composition, than for its pathetic tenderness as a memorial of a friend.

The Poet's pecuniary difficulties were removed in 1749, by the death of his maternal uncle, Lieutenant-Colonel Edmund Martyn, who, after bequeathing legacies to some other relations, ordered the residue of his real and personal estate to be divided between his nephew William Collins, and his nieces Elizabeth and Anne Collins, and appointed the said Elizabeth his executrix, who proved her uncle's will on the 30th of May, 1749. Collins's share was, it is said, about two thousand pounds ; and, as has been already observed, the money came most opportunely : a greater calamity even than poverty, however, shortly afterwards counterbalanced his good fortune ; but the assertion of the writer in the Gentleman's Magazine, that his mental aberration arose from his having squandered this legacy, appears to be unfounded.

One, and but one, letter of Collins's has ever been printed ; nor has a careful inquiry after others been successful. It is of peculiar interest, as it proves that he wrote an Ode on the Music of the Grecian Theatre, but which is unfortunately lost. The honour to which he alludes was the setting his Ode on the Passions to music.

“TO DR. WILLIAM HAYES, PROFESSOR OF MUSIC, OXFORD.

“SIR,

“MR. BLACKSTONE of Winchester some time since informed me of the honour you had done me at Oxford last summer; for which I return you my sincere thanks. I have another more perfect copy of the ode; which, had I known your obliging design, I would have communicated to you. Inform me by a line, if you should think one of my better judgment acceptable. In such case I could send you one written on a nobler subject; and which, though I have been persuaded to bring it forth in London, I think more calculated for an audience in the university. The subject is the Music of the Grecian Theatre; in which I have, I hope naturally, introduced the various characters with which the chorus was concerned, as Œdipus, Medea, Electra, Orestes, etc. etc. The composition too is probably more correct, as I have chosen the ancient tragedies for my models, and only copied the most affecting passages in them.

“In the mean time, you would greatly oblige me by sending the score of the last. If you can get it written, I will readily answer the expense.

If you send it with a copy or two of the ode (as printed at Oxford) to Mr. Clarke, at Winchester, he will forward it to me here. I am, Sir,

“ With great respect,
“ Your obliged humble servant,

“ WILLIAM COLLINS.

“ Chichester, Sussex, November 8, 1750.”

“ P. S. Mr. Clarke past some days here while Mr. Worgan was with me ; from whose friendship, I hope, he will receive some advantage.”

Soon after this period, the disease which had long threatened to destroy Collins's intellects assumed a more decided character ; but for some time the unhappy poet was the only person who was sensible of the approaching calamity. A visit to France was tried in vain ; and when Johnson called upon him, on his return, an incident occurred which proves that Collins wisely sought for consolation against the coming wreck of his faculties, from a higher and more certain source than mere human aid. Johnson says, “ he paid him a visit at Islington, where he was then waiting for his sister, whom he had directed to meet him : there was then nothing of disorder discernible in his mind by any but himself ; but he had withdrawn from study, and travelled with no other book than an English Testament, such as children carry to the school: when his friend took it into his hand, out of curiosity to see what companion a man of letters had chosen, 'I have but one book,' said Collins, 'but that is the best.' "

To this circumstance Hayley beautifully alludes in his epitaph on him :

He, "in reviving reason's lucid hours,
Sought on one book his troubled mind to rest,
And rightly deem'd the Book of God the best."

A journey to Bath proved as useless as the one to France; and in 1754, he went to Oxford for change of air and amusement, where he stayed a month. It was on this occasion that a friend, whose account of him will be given at length, saw him in a distressing state of restraint under the walls of Merton College. From the paucity of information respecting Collins, the following letters are extremely valuable; and though the statements are those of his friends, they may be received without suspicion of partiality, because they are free from the high colouring by which friendship sometimes perverts truth.

The first of the letters in question was printed in the Gentleman's Magazine :

"Jan. 20, 1781.

"MR. URBAN,

"WILLIAM COLLINS, the poet, I was intimately acquainted with, from the time that he came to reside at Oxford. He was the son of a tradesman in the city of Chichester, I think a hatter; and being sent very young to Winchester school, was soon distinguished for his early proficiency, and his turn for elegant composition. About the year 1740, he came off from that seminary first upon roll,* and was entered a commoner of Queen's college. There, no vacancy offering for New College, he remained a year or two, and then was chosen demy of Magdalen college; where, I think, he took a degree. As he brought with him, for so the whole turn of his conversation discovered, too high an opinion of his school acquisitions, and a sovereign contempt for all academic studies and discipline, he never looked with any complacency on his situation in the university, but was always complaining of the dulness of a college life. In short, he threw up his demyship, and, going to London, commenced a man of the town, spending his time in all the dissipation of Ranelagh, Vauxhall, and the play-houses; and was romantic enough to suppose that his superior abilities would draw the attention of the great world, by means of whom he was to make his fortune.

“In this pleasurable way of life he soon wasted his little property, and a considerable legacy left him by a maternal uncle, a colonel in the army, to whom the nephew made a visit in Flanders during the war. While on his tour he wrote several entertaining letters to his Oxford friends, some of which I saw. In London I met him often, and remember he lodged in a little house with a Miss Bundy, at the corner of King's-square-court, Soho, now a warehouse, for a long time together. When poverty overtook him, poor man, he had too much sensibility of temper to bear with misfortunes, and so fell into a most deplorable state of mind. How he got down to Oxford, I do not know ; but I myself saw him under Merton wall, in a very affecting situation, struggling, and conveyed by force, in the arms of two or three men, towards the parish of St. Clement, in which was a house that took in such unhappy objects : and I always understood, that not long after he died in confinement ; but when, or where, or where he was buried, I never knew.

“ Thus was lost to the world this unfortunate person, in the prime of life, without availing himself of fine abilities, which, properly improved, must have raised him to the top of any profession, and have rendered him a blessing to his friends, and an ornament to his country.

“ Without books, or steadiness and resolution to consult them if he had been possessed of any, he was always planning schemes for elaborate publications, which were carried no further than the drawing up proposals for subscriptions, some of which were published; and in particular, as far as I remember, one for ‘a History of the Darker Ages.’

“He was passionately fond of music; good-natured and affable; warm in his friendships, and visionary in his pursuits; and, as long as I knew him, very temperate in his eating and drinking. He was of moderate stature, of a light and clear complexion, with gray eyes, so very weak at times as hardly to bear a candle in the room; and often raising within him apprehensions of blindness.

“With an anecdote respecting him, while he was at Magdalen College, I shall close my letter. It happened one afternoon, at a tea visit, that several intelligent friends were assembled at his rooms to enjoy each other’s conversation, when in comes a member of a certain college,* as remarkable at that time for his brutal disposition as for his good scholarship; who, though he met with a circle of the most peaceable people in the world, was determined to quarrel; and, though no man said a word, lifted up his foot and kicked the tea-table, and all its contents, to the other side of the room. Our poet, though of a warm temper, was so confounded at the unexpected downfall, and so astonished at the unmerited insult, that he took no notice of the aggressor.

but getting up from his chair calmly, he began picking up the slices of bread and butter, and the fragments of his china, repeating very mildly,

Invenias etiam disjecti membra poetæ.

“I am your very humble servant,

“V.”

The next letter was found among the papers of Mr. William Hymers, of Queen's College, Oxford, who was preparing a new edition of the works of the poet for publication, when death prevented the completion of his design.

“Hill Street, Richmond in Surrey, July, 1783.

“SIR,

“YOUR favour of the 30th June I did not receive till yesterday. The person who has the care of my house in Bond Street, expecting me there every day, did not send it to Richmond, or I would have answered sooner. As you express a wish to know every particular, however trifling, relating to Mr. William Collins, I will endeavour, so far as can be done by a letter, to satisfy you. There are many little anecdotes, which tell well enough in conversation, but would be tiresome for you to read, or me to write, so shall pass them over. I had formerly several scraps of his poetry, which were suddenly written on particular occasions. These I lent among our acquaintance, who were never civil enough to return them ; and being then engaged in extensive business, I forgot to ask for them, and they are lost : all I have remaining of his are about twenty lines, which would require a little history to be understood, being written on trifling subjects. I have a few of his letters, the subjects of which are chiefly on business, but I think there are in them some flights, which strongly mark his character ; for which reason I preserved them. There are so few of his intimates now living, that I believe I am the only one who can give a true account of his family and connexions. The principal part of what I write is from my own knowledge, or what I have heard from his nearest relations.

“ His father was not the manufacturer of hats, but the vender. He lived in a genteel style at Chichester ; and, I think, filled the office of mayor more than once ; he was pompous in his manner ; but, at his death, he left his affairs rather embarrassed. Colonel Martyn, his wife’s brother, greatly assisted his family, and supported Mr. William Collins at the university, where he stood for a fellowship, which, to his great mortification, he lost, and which was his reason for quitting that place, at least that was his pretext. But he had other reasons : he was in arrears to his bookseller, his tailor, and other tradesmen. But, I believe, a desire to partake of the dissipation and gaiety of London was his principal motive. Colonel Martyn was at this time with his regiment; and Mr. Payne, a near relation, who had the management of the colonel's affairs, had likewise a commission to supply the Collinses with small sums of money. The colonel was the more sparing in this order, having suffered considerably by Alderman Collins, who had formerly been his agent, and, forgetting that his wife's brother's cash was not his own, had applied it to his own use. When Mr. William Collins came from the university, he called on his cousin Payne, gaily dressed, and with a feather in his hat; at which his relation expressed surprise, and told him his appearance was by no means that of a young man who had not a single guinea he could call his own. This gave him great offence; but remembering his sole dependence for subsistence was in the power of Mr. Payne, he concealed his resentment; yet could not refrain from speaking freely behind his back, and saying 'he thought him a d——d dull fellow;' though, indeed, this was an epithet he was pleased to bestow on every one who did not think as he would have them. His frequent demands for a supply obliged Mr. Payne to tell him he must pursue some other line of life, for he was sure Colonel Martyn would be displeased with him for having done so much. This resource being stopped, forced him to set about some work, of which his 'History of the Revival of Learning' was the first; and for which he printed proposals (one of which I have), and took the first subscription money from many of his particular friends: the work was begun, but soon stood still. Both Dr. Johnson and Mr. Langhorne are mistaken when they say, the 'Translation of Aristotle' was never begun: I know the contrary, for some progress was made in both, but most in the latter. From the freedom subsisting between us, we took the liberty of saying anything to each other. I one day reproached him with idleness; when, to convince me my censure was unjust, he showed me many sheets of his 'Translation of Aristotle,' which he said he had so fully employed himself about, as to prevent him calling on many of his friends so frequently as he used to do. Soon after this he engaged with Mr. Manby, a bookseller on Ludgate Hill, to furnish him with some Lives for the Biographia Britannica, which Manby was then publishing. He showed me some of the lives in embryo; but I do not recollect that any of them came to perfection. To raise a present subsistence he set about writing his odes; and, having a general invitation to my house, he frequently passed whole days there, which he employed in writing them, and as frequently burning what he had written, after reading them to me: many of them, which pleased me, I struggled to preserve, but without effect; for, pretending he would alter them, he got them from me, and thrust them into the fire. He was an acceptable companion every where; and, among the gentlemen who loved him for a genius, I may reckon the Doctors Armstrong, Barrowby, and Hill, Messrs. Quin, Garrick, and Foote, who frequently took his opinion on their pieces before they were seen by the public. He was particularly noticed by the geniuses who frequented the Bedford and Slaughter's Coffee Houses. From his knowledge of Garrick he had the liberty of the scenes and green-room, where he made diverting observations on the vanity and false consequence of that class of people; and his manner of relating them to his particular friends was extremely entertaining. In this manner he lived, with and upon his friends, until the death of Colonel Martyn, who left what fortune he died possessed of unto him and his two sisters. I fear I cannot be certain as to dates, but believe he left the university in the year 43. Some circumstances I recollect, make me almost certain he was in London that year; but I will not be so certain of the time he died, which I did not hear of till long after it happened. When his health and faculties began to decline, he went to France, and after to Bath, in hope his health might be restored, but without success. I never saw him after his sister removed him from M'Donald's madhouse at Chelsea to Chichester, where he soon sunk into a deplorable state of idiotism.

which, when I was told, shocked me exceedingly; and, even now, the remembrance of a man for whom I had a particular friendship, and in whose company I have passed so many pleasant happy hours, gives me a severe shock. Since it is in consequence of your own request, Sir, that I write this long farrago, I expect you will overlook all inaccuracies. I am, Sir,

“Your very humble servant,

“JOHN RAGSDALE.

“Mr. William Hymers, Queen's College, Oxford.”

The following communication, by Thomas War-ton, was also found among the papers of Mr. Hymers. A few passages, concerning various readings, are omitted.

“I often saw Collins in London in 1750. This was before his illness. He then told me of his intended History of the Revival of Learning, and proposed a scheme of a review, to be called the Clarendon Review, and to be printed at the university press, under the conduct and authority of the university. About Easter, the next year, I was in London; when, being given over, and supposed to be dying, he desired to see me, that he might take his last leave of me; but he grew better; and in the summer he sent me a letter on some private business, which I have now by me, dated Chichester, June 9, 1751, written in a fine hand, and without the least symptom of a disordered or debilitated understanding. In 1754, he came to Oxford for change of air and amusement, where he stayed a month ; I saw him frequently, but he was so weak and low, that he could not bear conversation. Once he walked from his lodgings, opposite Christ Church, to Trinity College, but supported by his servant. The same year, in September, I and my brother visited him at Chichester, where he lived, in the cathedral cloisters, with his sister. The first day he was in high spirits at intervals, but exerted himself so much that he could not see us the second. Here he showed us an Ode to Mr. John Home, on his leaving England for Scotland, in the octave stanza, very long, and beginning,

Home, thou return'st from Thames.

I remember there was a beautiful description of the spectre of a man drowned in the night, or, in the language of the old Scotch superstitions, seized by the angry spirit of the waters, appearing to his wife with pale blue cheek, &c. Mr. Home has no copy of it. He also showed us another ode, of two or three four-lined stanzas, called the Bell of Arragon ; on a tradition that, anciently, just before the king of Spain died, the great bell of the cathedral of Sarragossa, in Arragon, tolled spontaneously. It began thus :

The bell of Arragon, they say,
Spontaneous speaks the fatal day.

Soon afterwards were these lines :

Whatever dark aerial power,
Commission'd, haunts the gloomy tower.

The last stanza consisted of a moral transition to his own death and knell, which he called 'some simpler bell.' I have seen all his odes already published in his own handwriting; they had the marks of repeated correction: he was perpetually changing his epithets. Dr. Warton, my brother, has a few fragments of some other odes, but too loose and imperfect for publication, yet containing traces of high imagery.

"In illustration of what Dr. Johnson has related, that during his last malady he was a great reader of the Bible, I am favoured with the following anecdote from the Reverend Mr. Shenton, Vicar of St. Andrews, at Chichester, by whom Collins was buried: 'Walking in my vicaral garden one Sunday evening, during Collins's last illness, I heard a female (the servant, I suppose) reading the Bible in his chamber. Mr. Collins had been accustomed to rave much, and make great moanings; but while she was reading, or rather attempting to read, he was not only silent but attentive likewise, correcting her mistakes, which indeed were very frequent, through the whole of the twenty-seventh chapter of Genesis.' I have just been informed, from undoubted authority, that Collins had finished a Preliminary Dissertation to be prefixed to his History of the Restoration of Learning, and that it was written with great judgment, precision, and knowledge of the subject.

"T. W."

The overthrow of Collins's mind was too complete for it to be restored by variety of scene or the attentions of friendship. Thomas Warton describes him as being in a weak and low condition, and unable to bear conversation, when he saw him at Oxford. He was afterwards confined in a house for the insane at Chelsea; but before September, 1754, he was removed to Chichester, under the care of his sister, where he was visited by the two Wartons. At this time his spirits temporarily rallied; and he adverted with delight to literature, showing his guest the Ode to Mr. Home on his leaving England for Scotland. During Collins's illness Johnson was a frequent inquirer after his health, and those inquiries were made with a degree of feeling which, as he himself hints, may have partly arisen from the dread he entertained lest he might be the victim of a similar calamity. The following extracts are from letters addressed to Joseph Warton:

“ March 8, 1754.

“ But how little can we venture to exult in any intellectual powers or literary attainments, when we consider the condition of poor Collins. I knew him a few years ago, full of hopes and full of projects, versed in many languages, high in fancy, and strong in retention. This busy and forcible mind is now under the government of those who lately would not have been able to comprehend the least and most narrow of its designs. What do you hear of him? are there hopes of his recovery? or is he to pass the remainder of his life in misery and degradation? perhaps with complete consciousness of his calamity.”

“ December 24, 1754.

“ Poor dear Collins! Let me know whether you think it would give him pleasure if I should write to him. I have often been near his state, and therefore have it in great commiseration.”

“ April 15, 1756.

“ What becomes of poor dear Collins? I wrote him a letter which he never answered. I suppose writing is very troublesome to him. That man is no common loss. The moralists all talk of the uncertainty of fortune, and the transitoriness of beauty; but it is yet more dreadful to consider that the powers of the mind are equally liable to change, that understanding may make its appearance and depart, that it may blaze and expire."

In this state of mental darkness did Collins pass the last six or seven years of his existence, in the house now occupied by Mr. Mason, a bookseller in Chichester. His malady is described by Johnson as being, not so much an alienation of mind as a general laxity and feebleness of his vital, rather than his intellectual, powers; but his disorder seems, from other authorities, to have been of a more violent nature. As he was never married, he was indebted for protection and kindness to his youngest sister; and death, the only hope of the afflicted, came to his relief on the 12th of June, 1759, in the thirty-ninth year of his age, a period of life when the fervour of imagination is generally chastened without being subdued, and when all the mental powers are in their fullest vigour. He was buried in the church of St. Andrew, at Chichester, on the 15th of June; and the admiration of the public for his genius has been manifested by the erection of a monument by Flaxman, to his memory, in the Cathedral, which is thus described by Mr. Dalway, the historian of Sussex:

"Collins is represented as sitting in a reclining posture, during a lucid interval of the afflicting malady to which he was subject, with a calm and benign aspect, as if seeking refuge from his misfortunes in the consolations of the gospel, which appears open on a table before him, whilst his lyre and one of his best compositions lie neglected on the ground. Upon the pediment of the table are placed two female ideal figures in relief, representing love and pity, entwined each in the arms of the other; the proper emblems of the genius of his poetry." It bears the following epitaph from the pen of Hayley:

"Ye who the merits of the dead revere,
Who hold misfortune's sacred genius dear,
Regard this tomb, where Collins, hapless name,
Solicits kindness with a double claim.
Though nature gave him, and though science taught
The fire of fancy, and the reach of thought,
Severely doom'd to penury's extreme,
He pass'd in maddening pain life's feverish dream,
While rays of genius only served to show
The thickening horror, and exalt his woe.
Ye walls that echo'd to his frantic moan,
Guard the due records of this grateful stone;
Strangers to him, enamour'd of his lays,
This fond memorial to his talents raise.
For this the ashes of a bard require,
Who touch'd the tenderest notes of pity's lyre;
Who join'd pure faith to strong poetic powers;
Who, in reviving reason's lucid hours,
Sought on one book his troubled mind to rest,
And rightly deem'd the book of God the best."

Collins's character has been portrayed by all his biographers in very agreeable colours. He was amiable and virtuous, and was as much courted for his popular manners as for the charms of his conversation. The associate of Johnson, Armstrong, Hill, Garrick, Quin, Foote, the two Wartons, and Thomson, and the friend of several of these eminent men, he must have possessed many of the qualities by which they were distinguished; for though an adviser may be chosen from a very different class of persons, genius will only herd with genius. Johnson has honoured him by saying, that "his morals were pure and his opinions pious;" and though he hints that his habits were sometimes at variance with these characteristics, he assigns the aberration to the temptations of want, and the society into which poverty sometimes drives the best disposed persons, adding, that he "preserved the sources of action unpolluted, that his principles were never shaken, that his distinctions of right and wrong were never confounded, and that his faults had nothing of malignity or design, but proceeded from some unexpected pressure or casual temptation." A higher eulogium, from so rigid a moralist, could not be pronounced on a man whose life was, for many years, unsettled and perplexed; and those only who have experienced the pressure of pecuniary necessities can be aware of the difficulty of resisting meanness, or avoiding vice, if not in the sense in which these terms are usually understood, at least in a sense to which they may as properly be applied — that of refusing to prostitute talents to purposes foreign to the conviction and taste of their possessor.

On this mainly depend the annoyances and dangers of him who seeks a subsistence from his pen. The opinions which he may be desirous to express, or the subject he may be capable of illustrating, may not be popular, and the more important or learned they be, the more likely is such to be the case. Of course his labours would be rejected by publishers, who cannot buy what will not sell; hence no alternative remains but for him to manufacture marketable commodities; and when the popular taste of the present, as well as of former times, is remembered, the degradation to which a man of high intellect must often submit, when he neglects that for which nature and study peculiarly qualified him, for what is in general demand, may be easily conceived. It is not requisite to advert to the taste of the age in which we live, farther than to allude to the class of works which issues from the bazaars of fashionable publishers, and to ask, when such are alone in request, what would have been the fate, had they lived in our own times, of Johnson, Pope, Dryden, Addison, and the other ornaments of the golden age of literature? But if even in that age the Odes of Collins were too abstracted from mundane feelings, too rich in imagery, and too strongly marked by the fervour of inspiration to be generally appreciated, his chance of being so, by the public generally, is at this moment less; and the only hope of his obtaining that popularity to which he is unquestionably entitled, is by placing his works within the reach of all, and, more especially, by acquainting the multitude with the opinion entertained of him, by those whose judgments they have the sense to venerate, since they are sometimes willing to receive, on the credit of another, that which they have not themselves the discrimination or feeling to perceive.

An anecdote is related of Collins which, if true, proves that he felt the neglect with which his Odes were treated with the indignation natural to an enthusiastic temper. Having purchased the unsold copies of the first edition from the booksellers, he set fire to them with his own hand, as if to revenge himself on the apathy and ignorance of the public.

It is unnecessary to append to the Memoir of Collins many observations on the character of his poetry, because its peculiar beauties, and the qualities by which it is distinguished, are described with considerable force and eloquence by Sir Egerton Brydges, in the Essay prefixed to this edition. Campbell's remarks on the same subject cannot be forgotten; and other critics of the highest reputation have concurred in ascribing to Collins a conception and genius scarcely exceeded by any English poet. To say that Sir Egerton Brydges's Essay exaggerates the merit of some of his productions may produce the retort which has been made to Johnson's criticism, that he was too deficient in feeling to be capable of appreciating the excellence of the pieces which he censures. It is not, however, inconsistent with a high respect for Collins, to ascribe every possible praise to that unrivaled production, the Ode to the Passions, to feel deeply the beauty, the pathos, and the sublime conceptions of the Odes to Evening, to Pity, to Simplicity, and a few others, and yet to be sensible of the occasional obscurity and imperfections of his imagery in other pieces, to find it difficult to discover the meaning of some passages, to think the opening of four of his odes which commence with the common-place invocation of "O thou," and the alliteration by which so many lines are disfigured, blemishes too serious to be forgotten, unless the judgment be drowned in the full tide of generous and enthusiastic admiration of the great and extraordinary beauties by which these faults are more than redeemed.

That these defects are to be ascribed to haste it would be uncandid to deny; but haste is no apology for such faults in productions which scarcely fill a hundred pages, and which their author had ample opportunities to remove.

It may also be thought heterodoxy by the band, which, if small in numbers, is distinguished by taste, feeling, and genius, to concur in Collins's opinion, when he expressed himself dissatisfied with his Eclogues; for, though they are not without merit, it is very doubtful if they would have lived, even till this time, but for the Odes with which they are published, notwithstanding the zeal of Dr. Langhorne, who is in raptures over passages the excellence of which is not very conspicuous. To give a preference to the Verses to Sir Thomas Hanmer, of which all that Langhorne could find to say is, "that the versification is easy and genteel, and the allusions always poetical," and especially to the Ode addressed to Mr. Home, on the superstition of the Highlands, over the Eclogues, may possibly be deemed to betray a corrupt taste, since it is an admission which is, it is believed, made for the first time. In that Ode, among a hundred other beautiful verses, the following address to Tasso has seldom been surpassed:

"Prevailing Poet ! whose undoubting mind
Believed the magic wonders which he sung !
Hence, at each sound, imagination glows !
Hence, at each picture, vivid life starts here !
Hence, his warm lay with softest sweetness flows !
Melting it flows, pure, murmuring, strong, and clear,
And fills the impassion'd heart, and wins the harmonious ear !"

The picture of the swain drowned in a fen, and the grief of his widow, possessing every charm which simplicity and tenderness can bestow, and give to that Ode claims to admiration which, if admitted, have been hitherto conceded in silence.

From the coincidence between Collins's love of, and addresses to, Music, his residence at Oxford, and from internal evidence, Some Verses on Our Late Taste in Music, which appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine for 1740, and there said to be "by a Gentleman of Oxford," are printed in this edition of Collins's works, not, however, as positively his, but as being so likely to be written by him, as to justify their being brought to the notice of his readers.

A poet, and not to have felt the tender passion, would be a creature which the world has never yet seen. It is said that Collins was extremely fond of a young lady who was born the day before him, and who did not return his affection; and that, punning upon his misfortune, he observed, "he came into the world a day after the fair." The lady is supposed to have been Miss Elizabeth Goddard, the intended bride of Colonel Ross, to whom he addressed his beautiful Ode on the death of that Officer at the battle of Fontenoy, at which time she was on a visit to the family of the Earl of Tankerville, who then resided at Up-Park, near Chichester, a place that overlooks the little village of Harting, mentioned in the Ode.

Collins's person was of the middle size and well formed; of a light complexion, with gray, weak eyes. His mind was deeply imbued with classical literature, and he understood the Italian, French, and Spanish languages. He was well read, and was particularly conversant with early English writers, and to an ardent love of literature he united, as is manifest from many of his pieces, a passionate devotion to Music, that “ —— Sphere-descended maid,

Friend of Pleasure, Wisdom's aid.”

His family, which were very respectable, were established at Chichester in the sixteenth century as tradesmen of the higher order, and his immediate ancestor was mayor of that city in 1619:*

* Dallaway's Sussex, vol. i. p. 185 — The arms of the family of Collins are there said to have been, “Azure a griffin segreant or;” but in Sir William Burrell's MS. Collections for a History of Sussex, in the British Museum, the field is described as being vert. From those manuscripts which are marked “Additional MSS.” Nos. 5697 to 5699, the following notices of the Poet's family have been extracted.

There are monumental inscriptions in St. Andrew's Church, Chichester, to the Poet's father, mother, maternal uncle, Colonel Martyn, and sister, Mrs. Durnford.

* So much of the will of Colonel Edmund Martyn as relates to the Poet and his sister has been already cited, but the testator's situation in life and the respectability of his family are best shown by other parts of that document. He describes himself as a lieutenant-colonel in his Majesty's service, lying sick in the city of Chichester. To his niece Elizabeth, the wife of Thomas Napper, of Itchenor in Sussex, he bequeathed 100*l*. His copyhold estates of the manors of Selsey, and Somerly, in that county, to his nephew, Abraham Martyn, the youngest son of his late only brother, Henry Martyn, and to his servant, John Hipp, he gave his wearing apparel and ten pounds.

died. He was an only son : of his two sisters, Elizabeth, the eldest, died unmarried, and Anne, the youngest, who took care of him when he was bereft of reason, married first Mr. Hugh Sempill, who died in 1762, and secondly the Rev. Dr. Thomas Durnford, and died at Chichester in November, 1789. Her character is thus described on the authority of Mr. Park: "The Reverend Mr. Durnford, who resided at Chichester, and was the son of Dr. Durnford, informed me, in August, 1795, that the sister of Collins loved money to excess, and evinced so outrageous an aversion to her brother, because he squandered or gave away to the boys in the cloisters whatever money he had, that she destroyed, in a paroxysm of resentment, all his papers, and whatever remained of his enthusiasm for poetry, as far as she could. Mr. Hayley told me, when I visited him at Eartham, that he had obtained from her a small drawing by Collins, but it possessed no other value than as a memorial that the bard had attempted to handle the pencil as well as the pen."* That Mrs. Durnford was indifferent to her brother's fame, is stated by others, and Sir Egerton Brydges, in his Essay, has made some just observations on the circumstance.

This Memoir must not be closed without an expression of acknowledgment to the Bishop of Hereford, to the President of Magdalen College, to H. Gabell, Esq., and to I. Sanden, Esq., of Chichester, for the desire which they were so good as to manifest that this account of Collins might be more satisfactory than it is; and if his admirers consider that his present biographer has not done sufficient justice to his memory, an antidote to the injury will be found in the fervent and unqualified admiration which Sir Egerton Brydges has evinced for his genius.

AN ESSAY ON THE GENIUS AND POEMS OF COLLINS.

BY SIR EGERTON BRYDGES,
BART.

COLLINS is the founder of a new school of poetry, of a high class. It is true that, unless Buckhurst and Spenser had gone before him, he could not have written as he has done; yet he is an inventor very distinct from both. He calls his odes descriptive and allegorical; and this characterises them truly, but too generally. The personification of abstract qualities had never been so happily executed before; the pure spirituality of the conception, the elegance and force of the language, the harmony and variety of the numbers, were all executed with a felicity which none before or since have reached. That these poems did not at once captivate the public attention cannot be accounted for by any cause hitherto assigned. We may not wonder that the multitude did not at once perceive their full beauties; but that, among readers of taste and learning, there should not have been found a sufficient number to set the example of admiration, is very extraordinary.

In addition to all their other high merits, the mere novelty of thought and manner were sufficient to excite immediate notice. Nor was there any thing in Collins's station or character to create prejudices against the probability that beautiful effusions of genius might be struck out by his hand. His education at the college of Winchester, his fame at Oxford, his associates in London, all were fair preludes to the production of beautiful poetry. Indeed, he had already produced beautiful poetry in his Oriental Eclogues, four years before his Odes appeared. These were, it is admitted, of a different cast from his Odes, and of a gentleness and chastity of thought and diction, which he himself was conscious, some years afterwards, did not very well represent the gorgeousness of eastern composition.

It was a crisis when there was a fair opening for new candidates for the laurel. The uniformity of Pope's style began already to pall upon the public ear. Thomson was indolent, and Young eccentric; Gray had not yet appeared on the stage; and Akenside's metaphysical subject and diffuse style were not calculated to engross the general taste. Johnson had taken possession of the field of satire, but there are too many readers of enthusiastic mind to be satisfied with satire. The pedantry and uncouthness of Walter Harte had precluded him from ever being a fa-avourite with the public; Shenstone had not yet risen into fame; and Lyttelton was engrossed by politics. When, therefore, Collins's Odes appeared, all speculation would have anticipated that they must have been successful. But we must recollect that they did not excite the admiration of Johnson; and that Gray did not read them with that unqualified approval which his native taste would have inspired. This singularity must be accounted for by other causes than their want of merit.

The disappointment of Collins was so keen and deep, that he not only burned the unsold copies with his own hand, but soon fell into a melancholy which ended in insanity. Many persons have affected to comment on this result with an unfeeling ignorance of human nature, and, more especially, of fervid genius. It is, undoubtedly, highly dangerous to give the entire reins to imagination; the discipline of a constant exercise of reason is not only salutary, but necessary. But one can easily conceive how the indulgence of that state of mind which produced Collins's Odes could end in an entire overthrow of the intellect, when embittered by a defect of the principal objects of his worldly ambition. He is said to have been puffed up by a vanity which prompted him to expect that all eyes would be upon him, and all voices lifted in his praise. Such was the conception of a vulgar observer of the human character. Why should it have been vanity that prompted this hope? It was a consciousness of merit, of those brilliant powers which produced the Ode to the Passions! was ever a voice content which sung to those who would not hear, which was condemned

“ To waste its sweetness on the desert air? ”

Spenser's power of personification is copious beyond example; but it is seldom sufficiently select; rich as it is in imagination, it too commonly wants taste and delicacy; it has the fault of coarseness, which Burke's images in prose two centuries afterwards, sometimes fell into. But Collins's images are as pure, and of as exquisite delicacy, as they are spiritual. They are not human beings invested with some of the attributes of angels, but the whole figure is purely angelic, and of a higher order of creation; in this they are distinct even from the admirable personifications of Gray, because they are less earthly. The Ode to the Passions is, by universal consent, the noblest of Collins's productions, because it exhibits a much more extended invention, not of one passion only, but of all the passions combined, acting, according to the powers of each, to one end. The execution, also, is the happiest, each particular passion is drawn with inimitable force and compression. Let us take only FEAR and DESPAIR, each dashed out in four lines, of which every word is like inspiration. Beautiful as Spenser is, and sometimes sublime, yet he redoubles his touches too much, and often introduces some coarse feature or expression, which destroys the spell. Spenser, indeed, has other merits of splendid and inexhaustible invention, which render it impossible to put Collins on a par with him : but we must not estimate merit by mere quantity : if a poet produces but one short piece, which is perfect, he must be placed according to its quality. And surely there is not a single figure in Collins's Ode to the Passions which is not perfect, both in conception and language. He has had many imitators, but no one has ever approached him in his own department.

The Ode to Evening is, perhaps, the next in point of merit. It is quite of a different cast ; it is descriptive of natural scenery ; and such a scene of enchanting repose was never exhibited by Claude, or any other among the happiest of painters. Though a mere verbal description can never rival a fine picture in a mere address to the material part of our nature, yet it far eclipses it with those who have the endowment of a brilliant fancy, because it gratifies their taste, selection, and sentiment. Delightful, therefore, as it is to look upon a Claude, it is more delightful to look upon this description. It is vain to attempt to analyse the charm of this Ode ; it is so subtle, that it escapes analysis. Its harmony is so perfect, that it requires no rhyme: the objects are so happily chosen, and the simple epithets convey ideas and feelings so congenial to each other, as to throw the reader into the very mood over which the personified being so beautifully designed presides. No other poem on the same subject has the same magic. It assuredly suggested some images and a tone of expression to Gray in his Elegy.

The Ode on the Poetical Character is here and there a little involved and obscure; but its general conception is magnificent, and beaming that spirit of inventive enthusiasm, which alone can cherish the poet's powers, and bring forth the due fruits. Collins never touched the lyre but he was borne away by the inspiration under which he laboured. The Dirge in Cymbeline, the lines on Thomson, and the Ode on Colonel Ross breathe such a beautiful simplicity of pathos, and yet are so highly poetical and graceful in every thought and tone, that, exquisitely polished as they are, and without one superfluous or one prosaic word, they never once betray the artifices of composition. The extreme transparency of the words and thoughts would induce a vulgar reader to consider them trite, while they are the expression of a genius so refined as to be all essence of spirit. In Gray, excellent as he is, we continually encounter the marks of labour and effort, and occasional crudeness, which shows that effort had not always succeeded, such as "iron hand and torturing hour;" but nothing of this kind occurs in the principal poems of Collins. There is a fire of mind which supersedes labour, and produces what labour cannot. It has been said that Collins is neither sublime nor pathetic; but only ingenious and fanciful. The truth is, that he was cast in the very mould of sublimity and pathos. He lived in an atmosphere above the earth, and breathed only in a visionary world. He was conversant with nothing else, and this must have been the secret by which he produced compositions so entirely spiritual. He who has daily intercourse with the world, and feels the vulgar human passions, cannot be in a humour to write poems which do not partake of earthly coarseness.

It may be asked, cui bono? what is the moral use of such poems as these? Whatever refines the intellect improves the heart; whatever augments and fortifies the spiritual part of our nature raises us in the rank of created beings. And what poems are more calculated to refine our intellect, and increase our spirituality, than the poems of Collins? To embody, in a brilliant manner, the most beautiful abstractions, to put them into action, and to add to them splendour, harmony, strength, and purity of language, is to complete a task as admirable for its use and its delight, as it is difficult to be executed. No one can receive the intellectual gratification which such works are capable of producing without being the better for it. The understanding was never yet roused to the conception of such pure and abstract thinking without an elevation of the whole nature of the being so roused. The expression of subtle and evanescent ideas, carried to its perfection, is among the very noblest and most exalted studies with which the human mind can be conversant.

It has been the fashion of our own age to beat out works into twentyfold and fiftyfold the size of those of Collins. I do not quarrel with that fashion; each fashion has its use: and my own taste induces me to perceive the value and many attractions of long narrative poems, full of human passions and practical wisdom. The matter is more desirable than the workmanship; and much of occasional carelessness in the language may be forgiven, for fertility of natural and just thought and interest of story. But this in no degree diminishes the value of those gems, which, though of the smallest size, comprehend perfections of every kind. It is easier to work upon a large field than a small one, — one where is “Ample room and verge enough

The characters of hell to trace.”

But these diffuse productions are not calculated to give the same sort of pleasure as the gems.

How difficult was the path chosen by Collins is sufficiently proved by the want of success of all who have entered the same walk: Gray's was not the same, as I shall endeavour presently to show. In the miscellany of Dodsley and other collectors will be found numerous attempts at Allegorical Odes: they are almost all nauseous failures — without originality or distinctness of conception; bald in their language, lame in their numbers, and repulsive from their insipidity of ideas.

Gray's personifications can scarcely be called allegorical, they have so much of humanity about them. He dealt in all the noble and melancholy feelings of the human heart: he never for one moment forgot to be a moralist: he was constantly under the influence of powerful sympathy for the miseries of man's life; and wrote from the overflow of his bosom rather than of his imagination. It is true that his imagination presented the pictures to him; but it was his heart which impelled him to speak. Take the Ode on the Prospect of Eton College; there is not one word which did not break from the bottom of his heart. The multitude cannot enter into the visionary world of Collins: all who have a spark of virtuous human feelings can sympathize with Gray. It is impossible to deny that of these two beautiful poets Gray is the most instructive as a moralist; but Gray is not so original as Collins, not so inventive, not so perfect in his language, and has not so much the fire and flow of inspiration.

When Collins is spoken of as one of the minor poets, it is a sad misapplication of the term. Unless he be minor because the number and size of his poems is small, no one is less a minor poet. In him every word is poetry, and poetry either sublime or pathetic. He does not rise to the sublimity of Milton or Dante, or reach the graceful tenderness of Petrarch; but he has a visionary invention of his own, to which there is no rival. As long as the language lasts, every richly gifted and richly cultivated mind will read him with intense and wondering rapture; and will not cease to entertain the conviction, from his example, if from no other, that true poetry of the higher orders is real inspiration.

It will occur to many readers, on perusing these passages of exalted praise, that Johnson has spoken of Collins in a very different manner. Almost fifty years have elapsed since Johnson's final criticism on him appeared in his Lives of the Poets. It disgusted me so much at the time, and the disgust continued so violent, that for a long period it blinded me to all his stupendous merits, because it evinced not only bad taste but unamiable feelings. I cannot yet either justify it, or account for it. He speaks of Collins having sought for splendour without attaining it — of clogging his lines with consonants, and of mistaking inversion of language for poetry. Not one of these faults belongs to Collins. In almost all his poems the words follow their natural order, and are mellifluous beyond those of almost any other verse writer. If the Passions are not described with splendour, there is no such thing as splendour. If the beauties which he sought and attained are unnatural and extravagant, then the tests of correctness and good taste which have been hitherto set up must be abandoned.

This severe criticism is the more extraordinary because Johnson professed a warm personal friendship for Collins; he professes admiration of his talents, learning, and taste, as well as of his disposition and heart, and speaks of his afflicting ill health with a passionate tenderness which has seldom been equalled in beauty, pathos, and force of language. That he could love him personally with such fondness, but be blind to his splendid and unrivaled genius, is utterly beyond my power to account for. Who can say that Johnson wanted taste when we read his sublime and acute criticisms on Milton, Dryden, and Pope? Was it that he roused all the faculties of his judgment when he spoke of these great men of past times; yet, that when he descended to his contemporaries, he indulged his feelings rather than his intellect, and suffered himself to be overcome by the evil passions of envy and contempt? His natural taste was, probably, not the best; when his criticisms were perfect he had tasked his intellect rather than his feelings. He was a man of general wisdom and undoubted genius, but not a very nice scholar, and he prided himself upon his every-day sense, his practical knowledge, rather than those visionary musings which he thought a dangerous indulgence of imagination. He could not put the compositions of Collins among the mere curiosities of literature, but he permitted himself to depreciate habits of mental excursion which he had not himself cultivated.

It was not till more than twenty years after Collins's death that his Ode on the Superstitions of the Highlands was recovered. The two Wartons had seen it, and spoke highly of it to Johnson and others. About 1781, or 1782, a copy was found among the papers of Dr. Carlyle, with a chasm of two or three stanzas. The public deemed it equal to the expectations which had been raised of it; for my part I will confess that I was always deeply disappointed at it. There are in it occasional traces of Collins's genius and several good lines — but none grand — none of that felicitous flow and inspired vigour which mark the Ode to the Passions and other of his lyrics — none of that happy personification of abstract conceptions which is the characteristic of his genius. The majority of the lines lag and move heavily, and do not seem to me to rise much above mediocrity in the expression. The subject was attractive, and might have afforded space for the wild excursions of Collins's creative powers. As to the edition of Bell, in which it is pretended that the lost stanzas have been recovered, I have no more doubt that they are spurious than that I did not write them myself: I will not dwell upon this subject, but only mention that it is quite impossible Collins could write "Fate gave the fatal blow," and "bowing to Freedom's yoke;" and such a line as "In the first year of the first George's reign," &c.

There is not one line among these interpolated stanzas which it is possible that Collins could have written.

Mr. Ragdale relates that Collins was in the habit of writing numerous fragments, and then throwing them into the flames. Jackson, of Exeter, says the same of John Bampfylde. A sensitive mind is scarce ever satisfied with the reception it meets, when, in first heat of composition, it hopes to delight some listener, to which it first communicates its new effusions. It almost always considers itself to be "damn'd by faint praise." I have known fervid authors who, if they read or communicated a piece before it was finished, never went on with it. They thought it became blown upon, and turned from it with coldness, disgust, and despair. Yet the hearer is commonly not in fault : who can satisfy the warm hopes of aspiring and restless genius ?

The Wartons have expressed themselves with praise and affection of Collins, but not, I think, with the entire admiration which was due to him. Joseph Warton was a good-natured and generous-minded man, but something of rivalry lurked in his bosom ; and the fraternal partiality of Thomas Warton had the same effect. The younger brother seems to have thought that Joseph's genius was equal to that of Collins. Gray had the critical acumen to discern the difference ; but still he in no degree does justice to Collins. He accuses him of want of taste and selection, which is a surprising charge ; and the more so, because Gray did not disdain to borrow from him. Gray's fault was an affected fastidiousness, as appears by the slighting manner in which he speaks of Thomson's Castle of Indolence on its first appearance, as well as of Akenside's Pleasures of Imagination, and Shenstone's Elegies. That Gray had exquisite taste, and was a perfect scholar, no one can doubt.

Collins lived thirteen years after the publication of his Odes. It does not appear that he produced any thing after this publication. How soon his grand mental malady extinguished his literary powers, I do not exactly know, nor is it recorded, whether any part of it arose from bodily disorders. Medical men have never agreed regarding this most deplorable of human afflictions. In Collins's case it probably arose from the mind. On such an intellectual temperament the extinction of the visions which Hope had painted to him seems to have been sufficient to produce that derangement, which first enfeebled, and then perverted and annihilated his faculties. The account given by Johnson is different from that supplied by Mr. Ragdale and another anonymous communication.

He had, perhaps, lucid intervals in which he discovered nothing but weakness and exhaustion. But he appears to have sometimes had fits of violence and despair. It seems that he was an enthusiastic admirer of Shakespeare, and a great reader of black letter books. It may be inferred that his studies were not entirely given up during his malady; but it is a subject of great wonder and regret that the Wartons, the intimate friends both of his better and darker days, have left no particular memorials of him. He had a sister, lately, if not still, living, from whom, though of a very uncongenial nature, something might surely have been gathered. But there is a familiarity which, by destroying admiration, destroys the perception of what will interest others. There are few of our poets of rare genius, of whose private life and character much is known. Little is known of Spenser, Shakespeare, and Milton:

not much even of Thomson. More is known of Gray by the medium of his beautiful letters; but when Southey, Wordsworth, and Scott are gone, posterity will know every particular of them; and, even now, know much which fills them with delight and admiration. But let us know something in good time, also of the new candidates for poetical fame!

If the life of a poet is not in accordance with his song, it may be suspected that the song itself is not genuine. Who can be a poet, and yet be a worldling in his passions and habits? An artificial poet is a disgusting dealer in trifles: nothing but the predominance of strong and unstimulated feeling will give that inspiration without which it is worse than an empty sound. When the passion is factitious, the excitement has always an immoral tendency; but the delineation of real and amiable sentiments calls up a sympathy in other bosoms which thus confirms and fixes them where they would otherwise die away. The memory may preserve what is artificial, but, when it becomes stale, it turns to offensiveness, and thus breeds an alienation from literature itself.

That Collins has continued to increase in fame as years have passed away, is the most decisive of all proofs that his poems have the pure and sterling merit which began to be ascribed to them soon after his death. M. Bonstetten tells me that Gray died without a suspicion of the high rank he was thereafter to hold in the annals of British genius? What did poor Collins think when he submitted his sublime odes to the flames? He must have had fits of confidence, even then, in himself; but intermixed with gloom and despair, and curses of the wretched doom of his birth! Is it sufficient that a man should wrap himself up in himself, and be content if the poetry creates itself and expires in his own heart? We strike the lyre to excite sympathy, and, if no one will hear, will any one not feel that he strikes in vain; and that the talent given us is useless, and even painful? But who can be assured that he has the talent if no one acknowledges it? To have it, and not to be assured that we have it, is a restless fire that burns to consume us.

Let no one envy the endowments, if he looks at the fate, of poets. Let him contemplate Spenser, Denham, Rochester, Otway, Collins, Chatterton, Burns, Kirke White, Bloomfield, Shelley, Keats, and Byron, besides those of foreign countries! Perhaps Collins was the most unhappy of all; as he was assuredly one of the most inspired and most amiable.

“In woful measures wan Despair—
Low sullen sounds his grief beguiled,
A solemn, strange, and mingled air;
'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.”

Langhorne's edition of Collins first appeared in 1765, accompanied by observations which have been generally appended to subsequent editions. These observations have commonly borne the character of feebleness and affectation; they have a sort of pedantic prettiness, which is somewhat repulsive, but they do not want ingenuity, or justness of criticism. Part of them, at least, had previously appeared in the Monthly Review, probably written by Langhorne. Langhorne was not deficient himself in poetical genius, but is principally remembered by a single beautiful stanza, "Cold on Canadian hills," &c. From the time of Langhorne's first edition, Collins became a popular poet; a miniature edition appeared soon after that of Langhorne; and as long as I can remember books, which goes back at least to the year 1770, Collins's poems were almost universally on the lips of readers of English poetry. That Cowper, in 1784, should speak of him as "a poet of no great fame," proves nothing, since Cowper's long seclusion from the world had made him utterly ignorant of contemporary literature. The negative inference, from the omission of Beattie, is not of much weight. I cannot recollect the date of the article in the Monthly Review; but, as it appears that Collins survived till 1759, I suspect it was before Collins's death. It was in September, 1754, that the Wartons visited him at Chichester: in that year he paid a visit to Oxford, when it appears that he was suffering under exhausture, not alienation, of mind.

The critics, and, among the rest, Mrs. Barbauld and Campbell, have ascribed to him "frequent obscurity;" this is unjust,—his general characteristic is lucidness and transparency: he is never obscure, unless in the Ode to Liberty, and, perhaps, in a few passages of the Ode on the Manners. Campbell's criticism is, otherwise, worthy of this beautiful poet, whom he praises with congenial spirit. When Hazlitt speaks of the "tinsel and splendid patchwork" of Collins, "mixed with the solid, sterling ore of his genius," he speaks of a base material not to be found there. In Collins there is no tinsel or patchwork, one of his excellencies is, that the whole of every piece is of one web; there are no joinings or meaner threads. There is no height to which Collins might not have risen, had he lived long, had his mind continued sound, and had he persevered in exercising his genius. Campbell remarks that, at the same age, Milton had written nothing which could eclipse his productions.

Of the two communications regarding Collins, to which I have already alluded, one anonymous, the other by a Mr. John Ragsdale, I must say something more. The first, signed V., appeared in the Gentleman's Magazine, with the date of the 20th Jan. 1781. I well remember its publication, and with what eagerness I read it. I suspect it was at the very crisis of the appearance of the last portion of Johnson's Lives, but possibly a year earlier. I perused it with a mixture of delight, melancholy, and disgust; the first passage which struck me was this: "As he brought with him [to Oxford], for so the whole tone of his conversation discovered, too high an opinion of his school acquisitions and a sovereign contempt for all academic studies and discipline, he never looked with any complacency on his situation in the University, but was always complaining of the dulness of a college life. In short, he threw up his demyship, and going to London, commenced a man of the town, spending his time in all the dissipation of Ranelagh, Vauxhall, and the playhouses; and was romantic enough to suppose that his superior abilities would draw the attention of the great world, by means of whom he was to make his fortune," &c., &c. — "Thus was lost to the world this unfortunate person, in the prime of life, without availing himself of fine abilities, which, if properly improved, must have raised him to the top of any profession, and have rendered him a blessing to his friends, and an ornament to his country."

The vulgarity and narrow-mindedness of this last paragraph filled me with indignation and contempt. In a selfish point of view Collins might, unquestionably, have done better by binding himself to the trammels of a profession; but would he have been more an honor to his friends and an ornament to his country? Are the fruits of genius he has left behind no ornament or use to his country? Professional men, for the most part, live for themselves, and not for the world. Who now remembers Lord Camden, Lord Thurlow, Lord Rosslyn, Lord Kenyon, Lord Ellenborough, or a hundred episcopal or medical characters, all rich and famous in their day?

The character of his person and habits we read with deep interest. "He was passionately fond of music, good-natured, and affable, warm in his friendships, and visionary in his pursuits; and, as long as I knew him, very temperate in his eating and drinking. He was of a moderate stature, of a light and clear complexion, with gray eyes, so very weak at times as hardly to bear a candle in the room, and often raising within him apprehensions of blindness."

The letter from Mr. John Ragsdale is addressed to Mr. William Hymers, Queen's College, Oxford, dated "Hill Street, Richmond, in Surrey, July, 1783." He appears to have been a tradesman in Bond Street; and he surveyed the character of Collins (with whom he was familiar) with a tradesman's eye. He reproached the poet with idleness, not because he was lingering and losing his time on the road to fame, but because he omitted to get money by his pen. "To raise a present subsistence," says Ragsdale, "he set about writing his Odes; and having a general invitation to my house, he frequently passed whole days there, which he employed in writing them, and as frequently burning what he had written after he had read them to me: many of them, which pleased me, I struggled to preserve, but without effect; for, pretending he would alter them, he got them from me, and thrust them into the fire." That he wrote the Odes to gain a present subsistence is but the tradesman's mistaken comment.

Gray was about four years older than Collins, and he survived him twelve years; he appears to have spent these years in gloominess and spleen; but we know not what intense pleasures he received from his solitary studies, from the improvement of his mind, from that exquisite taste and increasing erudition of which every day added to the stores. The enthusiasm of Collins was more active and adventurous, and his erudition probably more acute. Timidity and fastidiousness were great defects in Gray; they kept down his invention, and made him resort to the wealth of others, when he could better have relied upon himself. But as to borrowing expressions and simple materials, no genius ever did otherwise; it is the new and happy combination in which lies the invention. It may be doubted which are now most popular, the Odes of Collins or of Gray. On the one hand, what is most abstract is least calculated for the general reader; on the other hand, the variety of learned allusions in Gray renders the style and thoughts of his most celebrated Odes less simple, less direct, and less easily comprehended at once; but then his deep morality, the touching strokes which go immediately to the heart, his sensibility to the common sorrows of human life, his powerful reflection of the sentiments which "come home to every one's business and bosom," form an attraction which perhaps turns the scale in his favour. Of both these sublime poets the correctness of composition renders the writings a national good.

The French Revolution, which affected and partly reversed the minds of all Europe, produced a new era in our literature. There was good as well as evil in the new force thus infused into the human intellect. Our poetry had generally become tame and trite; a sort of languid mechanism had brought it into contempt; it was very little read, and still less esteemed. This might be not merely the effect, but also the cause of a deficiency of striking genius in the candidates for the laurel. Collins and Gray were dead; Mason had hung up the lyre; and Thomas Warton was then thought too laboured and quaint; Hayley had succeeded beyond expectation by a return to moral and didactic poetry at a moment when the public was satiated by vile imitations of lyrical and descriptive composition; but Cowper gave a new impulse to the curiosity of poetical readers, by a natural train of thought and the unlaboured effusions of genuine feeling. There is no doubt that a fearful regard to models stifles all force and preeminent merit. The burst of the French Revolution set the faculties of all young persons free. It was dangerous to secondary talents, and only led them into extravagances and absurdities. To Wordsworth, Southey, Scott, it was the removal of a weight, which would have hid the fire of their genius. But the exuberance of their inexhaustible minds in no degree lessens the value of the more reserved models of excellence of a tamer age. The contrast of their varied attractions supplies the reader with opposite kinds of merit, which delight and improve the more by this very opposition.

Authors seldom estimate each other rightly in their lifetimes. The race of poets, of whom the last died with the century, had little friendship, or even acquaintance among themselves; or rather, they broke into little sets of two and three, which narrowed their opinions and their hearts; Gray and Mason, Johnson and the two Wartons, Cowper and Hayley, Darwin and Miss Seward; but Shenstone, Beattie, Akenside, Burns, Mrs. Carter, Mrs. Smith, &c. stood alone. This is not desirable. Innumerable advantages spring from frank and generous communication. Collins and Gray had not the most remote personal knowledge of each other. Gray never mentions Dr. Sneyd Davies, a poet and an Etonian, nearly contemporary; nor Nicholas Hardinge, a scholar and a poet also. Mundy, the author of Needwood Forest, passed a long life in the country, totally removed from poets and literati, except the small coterie of Miss Seward, at Litchfield. The lives of poets would be the most amusing of all biography, if the materials were less scanty: it is strange that so few of them have left any ample records of themselves; of many not even a letter or fragment of memorials is preserved. None of Cowley's letters, a mode of composition in which he is said to have eminently excelled, have come down to us. Of Prior, Tickell, Thomson, Young, Dyer, Akenside, the Wartons, there are few of any importance known to be in existence. Those of Hayley, which Dr. J. Johnson has brought forward, are not of the interest which might have been expected. Mrs. Carter's are excellent, and many of Beattie's amusing and amiable: it had been well for Miss Seward if most of hers had been consigned to the flames. Those of Charlotte Smith it has not been thought prudent to give to the public. The greater part of those of Lord Byron, which Moore has hitherto put forth, had better have been spared : they are written in false taste, and are under a factitious character : in general, the prose style of poets is admirable ; — it was not Lord Byron's excellence. We have no specimens of the prose of Collins : it is grievous that he did not execute his project of The History of the Revival of Literature, or of the Lives for the Biographia Britannica, which he undertook. Poets of research are, of all authors, best qualified to write biography with sagacity and eloquence ; they see into the human heart, and detect its most secret movements ; and if there be a class of literature more amusing and more instructive than another, it is well written biography.

We have a few poets who have not possessed erudition ; for genius will overcome all deficiencies of art and labour, such as Shakespeare, Chatterton, Burns, and Bloomfield : but it cannot be questioned that erudition is a mighty aid. Milton could never have been what he was without profound and laborious erudition. Another necessary knowledge is the knowledge of the human heart, which no industry and learning will give. It is an intuitive gift, which mainly depends on an acute and correct imagination, and a sympathetic sensibility of the human passions. Among the innumerable rich endowments of Shakespeare this was the first ; it was the predominant brilliance of his knowledge which gave him correctness of description, sentiment, and observation, and clearness, force, and eloquence of language.

Collins had only reached the age of twenty-six when his Odes were published: what inconceivable power would the maturity of age have given him? It is lamentable that he had no familiar friend and companion from that period capable of apprehending and remembering his conversations. In his lucid intervals he must have said many wise, many learned, and many brilliant things; perhaps his very disease, in its vacillation between light and darkness, may have struck out many unexpected and surprising beauties, which common attendants were utterly incapable of appreciating. The flushes of the mind under the unnatural impulses of malady are sometimes imitably splendid. His reason, at times, was sound, for his reason was fervid to the last. But it is said that his shrieks sometimes resounded through the cathedral cloisters of Chichester till the horror of those who heard him was insupportable.

All these speculations may appear tedious to those whose curiosity is confined to facts: but new facts regarding Collins are not to be had: and what are facts unless they are accompanied by reflections, conclusions, and sentiments? The use of facts is to teach us to think, to judge, and to feel : and facts, regarding men of genius, are valuable in enabling us to contemplate how far the gifts of high intellect contribute to our happiness, or afford guides for the rest of mankind ; in what respects they have the possessors upon an equality with the herd of the people ; and where they expose them to temptations from which others are free. For these purposes the ill fated Collins is a melancholy illustration : the Muse had touched the lips of his infancy, and infused her spirit into him ; she had given him a piercing understanding, and an amiable disposition and temper ; she enabled him to come forth with poetry of the first class, in the earliest bloom of youth ; and to deserve, if not to win, the envied laurel, which millions have reached at in vain ! What seeming glories and blessings were these ! Yet to how few was so much misery dispensed as to this once envied being ! May we not hope that his spirit now has its mighty reward ?

Let it not be denied that there is high virtue in the culture of the mind, when directed to pure and elevated objects, and accustoming itself to travel in lofty paths ! The mind cannot attain the necessary refinement, nor have its sight cleared of the film of earthly grossness, unless the heart throws off the dregs of coarser feeling, and keeps its wings afloat on a lighter and airier atmosphere. It may be said, that there have been bad men who have been great poets: but this position remains to be proved. The dis-solute men who have written verses have not been great poets. Were Dante, Petrarch, Tasso, Spenser, Shakespeare, Dryden, Pope, Thomson, Burns, bad men? We know that Milton's character was great and holy, whatever were his politics: and who could be more virtuous than Gray, Beattie, Cowper, and Kirke White? And have we not virtuous poets among the living, — men whose native splendour and intellectual culture have almost purified them into spirits? Let us never cease to meditate on the dejected inspiration, which could pour forth such strains as these:

“ With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
Pale Melancholy sat retired;
And from her wild sequester'd seat,
In notes by distance made more sweet,
Pour'd through the mellow horn her pensive soul:
And, dashing soft from rocks around,
Bubbling runnels join'd the sound;
Through glades and glooms the mingled measures stole
Or o'er some haunted stream with fond delay
Round a holy calm diffusing,
Love of peace and lonely musing,
In hollow murmurs died away.”

There are those who will think the praises thus bestowed upon Collins extravagant. It is now sixty years since I became familiar with him; and I still think of him with unabated admiration. When the calm judgment of age confirms the passion of youth and boyhood, we cannot be much mistaken in the merit we ascribe to him who is the object of it.

ORIENTAL ECLOGUES.

WRITTEN ORIGINALLY FOR THE ENTERTAIN-MENT OF THE LADIES OF TAURIS.

AND NOW TRANSLATED.

— Ubi primus equis Oriens adflavit anhelis.

VIRG.

The First Edition was entitled, "Persian Eclogues, written originally for the Entertainment of the Ladies of Tauris. And now first translated, &c.

Quod si non hic tantus fructus ostenderetur, et si ex his studiis delectatio sola peteretur ; tamen, ut opinor, hanc animi remissionem humanissimam ac liberalissimam judicaretis.

CIC. pro Arch. Poeta."

PREFACE.

It is with the writings of mankind, in some measure, as with their complexions or their dress; each nation hath a peculiarity in all these, to distinguish it from the rest of the world.

The gravity of the Spaniard, and the levity of the Frenchman, are as evident in all their productions as in their persons themselves; and the style of my countrymen is as naturally strong and nervous, as that of an Arabian or Persian is rich and figurative.

There is an elegance and wildness of thought which recommends all their compositions; and our geniuses are as much too cold for the entertainment of such sentiments, as our climate is for their fruits and spices. If any of these beauties are to be found in the following Eclogues, I hope my reader will consider them as an argument of their being original. I received them at the hands of a merchant, who had made it his business to enrich himself with the learning, as well as the silks and carpets of the Persians.

The little information I could gather concerning their author, was, that his name was Abdallah, and that he was a native of Tauris.

It was in that city that he died of a distemper fatal in those parts, whilst he was engaged in celebrating the victories of his favourite monarch, the great Abbas.* As to the Eclogues themselves, they give a very just view of the miseries and inconveniences, as well as the felicities, that attend one of the finest countries in the East.

The time of writing them was probably in the beginning of Sha Sultan Hosseyn's reign, the successor of Sefi or Solyman the Second.

Whatever defects, as, I doubt not, there will be many, fall under the reader's observation, I hope his candour will incline him to make the following reflection :

That the works of Orientals contain many peculiarities, and that, through defect of language, few European translators can do them justice.

* In the Persian tongue, Abbas signifieth "the father of the people."

ECLOGUE I.

SELIM; OR, THE SHEPHERD'S MORAL.

SCENE, A valley near Bagdat.

TIME, The morning.

'YE Persian maids, attend your poet's lays,
And hear how shepherds pass their golden days.
Not all are blest, whom fortune's hand sustains
With wealth in courts, nor all that haunt the plains:
Well may your hearts believe the truths I tell; 5
'Tis virtue makes the bliss, where'er we dwell.'

Reminds of timidly
- never

Thus Selim sung, by sacred Truth inspired; Reminds of Nor praise, but such as Truth bestow'd, desired.
Wise in himself, his meaning songs convey'd
Informing morals to the shepherd maid; 10
(Or taught the swains that surest bliss to find,
What groves nor streams bestow, a virtuous mind.

VARIATION.

Ver. 8. No praise the youth, but hers alone desired :

When sweet and blushing, like a virgin bride,
 The radiant morn resumed her orient pride ;
 When wanton gales along the valleys play, 15
 Breathe on each flower, and bear their sweets away ;
 By Tigris' wandering waves he sat, and sung
 This useful lesson for the fair and young.

‘Ye Persian dames,’ he said, ‘to you belong—
 Well may they please—the morals of my song :
 No fairer maids, I trust, than you are found, 21
 Graced with soft arts, the peopled world around !
 The morn that lights you, to your loves supplies
 Each gentler ray delicious to your eyes :
 For you those flowers her fragrant hands bestow ; 25
 And yours the love that kings delight to know.
 Yet think not these, all beauteous as they are,
 The best kind blessings heaven can grant the fair !
 Who trust alone in beauty’s feeble ray
 Boast but the worth * Balsora’s pearls display : 30
 Drawn from the deep we own their surface bright,
 But, dark within, they drink no lustrous light :
 Such are the maids, and such the charms they boast,
 By sense unaided, or to virtue lost.

VARIATIONS.

- Ver. 18. When sweet and odorous, like an eastern bride,
 30. Balsora’s pearls have more of worth than they :
 31. Drawn from the deep, they sparkle to the sight,
 And all-unconscious shoot a lustrous light :

* The gulf of that name, famous for the pearl fishery.

Self-flattering sex ! your hearts believe in vain 35.
 That love shall blind, when once he fires, the swain ;
 Or hope a lover by your faults to win,
 As spots on ermine beautify the skin :
 Who seeks secure to rule, be first her care
 Each softer virtue that adorns the fair ; 40.
 Each tender passion man delights to find,
 The loved perfections of a female mind !

‘Blest were the days when Wisdom held her reign,
 And shepherds sought her on the silent plain !
 With Truth she wedded in the secret grove, 45.
 Immortal Truth, and daughters bless’d their love.
 O haste, fair maids ! ye Virtues, come away !
 Sweet Peace and Plenty lead you on your way !
 The balmy shrub, for you shall love our shore,
 By Ind excell’d, or Araby, no more. 50.

‘Lost to our fields, for so the fates ordain,
 The dear deserters shall return again.
 Come thou, whose thoughts as limpid springs are clear,
 To lead the train, sweet Modesty, appear :

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 46. The fair-eyed Truth, and daughters bless’d their love.

53. O come, thou Modesty, as they decree,
 The rose may then improve her blush by thee.

Here make thy court amidst our rural scene, 55
And shepherd girls shall own thee for their queen:
With thee be Chastity, of all afraid,
Distrusting all, a wise suspicious maid,
But man the most:—not more the mountain doe
Holds the swift falcon for her deadly foe. 60
Cold is her breast, like flowers that drink the dew;
A silken veil conceals her from the view.
No wild desires amidst thy train be known;
But Faith, whose heart is fix'd on one alone:
Desponding Meekness, with her downcast eyes,
And friendly Pity, full of tender sighs; 66
And Love the last: by these your hearts approve;
These are the virtues that must lead to love.'

Thus sung the swain; and ancient legends say
The maids of Bagdat verified the lay: 70
Dear to the plains, the Virtues came along,
The shepherds loved, and Selim bless'd his song.

VARIATION.

Ver. 69. Thus sung the swain, and eastern legends say

ECLOGUE II.

HASSAN ; OR, THE CAMEL DRIVER.

SCENE, The desert. TIME, Midday.

IN silent horror o'er the boundless waste
The driver Hassan with his camels past : see above
One cruise of water on his back he bore,
And his light scrip contain'd a scanty store ;
A fan of painted feathers in his hand, 5
To guard his shaded face from scorching sand.
The sultry sun had gain'd the middle sky,
And not a tree, and not an herb was nigh ;
The beasts with pain their dusty way pursue ; 9
Shrill roar'd the winds, and dreary was the view !
With desperate sorrow wild, the affrighted man Thrice sigh'd, thrice struck his breast, and thus began :
' Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
' When first from Schiraz' walls I bent my way !'

VARIATION.

Ver. 1. In silent horror o'er the desert waste

‘ Ah ! little thought I of the blasting wind, 15.
The thirst, or pinching hunger, that I find !
Bethink thee, Hassan, where shall thirst assuage,
When fails this cruise, his unrelenting rage ?
Soon shall this scrip its precious load resign ; 19
Then what but tears and hunger shall be thine ?

‘ Ye mute companions of my toils, that bear
In all my griefs a more than equal share !
Here, where no springs in murmurs break away,
Or moss-crown’d fountains mitigate the day,
In vain ye hope the green delights to know, 25
Which plains more blest, or verdant vales bestow :
Here rocks alone, and tasteless sands, are found,
And faint and sickly winds for ever howl around.
‘ Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day, 29
‘ When first from Schiraz’ walls I bent my way !’

‘ Curst be the gold and silver which persuade Weak men to follow far fatiguing trade !
The lily peace outshines the silver store,
And life is dearer than the golden ore :
Yet money tempts us o’er the desert brown, 35
To every distant mart and wealthy town.
Full oft we tempt the land, and oft the sea ;
And are we only yet repaid by thee ?
Ah ! why was ruin so attractive made ?
Or why fond man so easily betray’d ? 40
Why heed we not, whilst mad we haste along,
The gentle voice of peace, or pleasure’s song ?

Or wherefore think the flowery mountain's side,
The fountain's murmurs, and the valley's pride,
Why think we these less pleasing to behold 45
Than dreary deserts, if they lead to gold?

‘Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
‘When first from Schiraz’ walls I bent my way!’

‘O cease, my fears! — all frantic as I go, 49
When thought creates unnumber’d scenes of woe,
What if the lion in his rage I meet! —
Oft in the dust I view his printed feet:
And, fearful! oft, when day’s declining light
Yields her pale empire to the mourner night, 54
By hunger roused, he scours the groaning plain,
Gaunt wolves and sullen tigers in his train:
Before them Death with shrieks directs their way,
Fills the wild yell, and leads them to their prey.

‘Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day, 59
‘When first from Schiraz’ walls I bent my way!’

‘At that dead hour the silent asp shall creep,
If aught of rest I find, upon my sleep:
Or some swoln serpent twist his scales around,
And wake to anguish with a burning wound.
Thrice happy they, the wise contented poor, 65
From lust of wealth, and dread of death secure!
They tempt no deserts, and no griefs they find;
Peace rules the day, where reason rules the mind.

‘Sad was the hour, and luckless was the day,
‘When first from Schiraz’ walls I bent my way!’

‘O hapless youth! — for she thy love hath won,
The tender Zara will be most undone!
Big swell’d my heart, and own’d the powerful maid,
When fast she dropt her tears, as thus she said:
“Farewell the youth whom sighs could not detain;
Whom Zara’s breaking heart implored in vain!
Yet, as thou go’st, may every blast arise
Weak and unfelt, as these rejected sighs!
Safe o’er the wild, no perils mayst thou see, 79
No griefs endure, nor weep, false youth, like me.”
O let me safely to the fair return,
Say, with a kiss, she must not, shall not mourn;
O! let me teach my heart to lose its fears,
Recall’d by Wisdom’s voice, and Zara’s tears.’

He said, and call’d on heaven to bless the day,
When back to Schiraz’ walls he bent his way. 86

VARIATION.

Ver. 83. Go teach my heart to lose its painful fears.

ECLOGUE III.

ABRA; OR, THE GEORGIAN SULTANA.

SCENE, A forest. TIME, The evening.

In Georgia's land, where Tefflis' towers are seen,
In distant view, along the level green,
While evening dew's enrich the glittering glade,
And the tall forests cast a longer shade,
What time 'tis sweet o'er fields of rice to stray, 5
Or scent the breathing maize at setting day;
Amidst the maids of Zagen's peaceful grove,
Emyra sung the pleasing cares of love.

Of Abra first began the tender strain,
Who led her youth with flocks upon the plain. 10
At morn she came those willing flocks to lead.
Where lilies rear them in the watery mead;
From early dawn the livelong hours she told,
Till late at silent eve she penn'd the fold.
Deep in the grove, beneath the secret shade, 15
A various wreath of odorous flowers she made:

Verses 5 and 6 were inserted in the second edition.

Gay-motley'd * pinks and sweet jonquils she chose,

The violet blue that on the moss-bank grows ;
All sweet to sense, the flaunting rose was there ;
The finish'd chaplet well adorn'd her hair. 20

Great Abbas chanced that fated morn to stray,
By love conducted from the chase away ;
Among the vocal vales he heard her song,
And sought, the vales and echoing groves among ;
At length he found, and woo'd the rural maid ; 25
She knew the monarch, and with fear obey'd.

‘ Be every youth like royal Abbas moved,
‘ And every Georgian maid like Abra loved !’

The royal lover bore her from the plain ;
Yet still her crook and bleating flock remain : 30
Oft, as she went, she backward turn'd her view,
And bade that crook and bleating flock adieu.
Fair, happy maid ! to other scenes remove,
To richer scenes of golden power and love !
Go leave the simple pipe and shepherd's strain ; 35
With love delight thee, and with Abbas reign !

‘ Be every youth like royal Abbas moved,
‘ And every Georgian maid like Abra loved !’

* That these flowers are found in very great abundance in some of the provinces of Persia, see the Modern History of the ingenious Mr. Salmon. C.

Yet, 'midst the blaze of courts, she fix'd her love
On the cool fountain, or the shady grove ; 40
Still, with the shepherd's innocence, her mind
To the sweet vale, and flowery mead, inclined ;
And oft as spring renew'd the plains with flowers,
Breathed his soft gales, and led the fragrant hours,
With sure return she sought the sylvan scene, 45
The breezy mountains, and the forests green.
Her maids around her moved, a duteous band !
Each bore a crook, all rural, in her hand :
Some simple lay, of flocks and herds, they sung ;
With joy the mountain and the forest rung. 50
 'Be every youth like royal Abbas moved,
 'And every Georgian maid like Abra loved !'

And oft the royal lover left the care
And thorns of state, attendant on the fair ;
Oft to the shades and low-roof'd cots retired, 55
Or sought the vale where first his heart was fired :
A russet mantle, like a swain, he wore,
And thought of crowns, and busy courts, no more.
 'Be every youth like royal Abbas moved,
 'And every Georgian maid like Abra loved !' 60

Blest was the life that royal Abbas led :
Sweet was his love, and innocent his bed.
What if in wealth the noble maid excel ?
The simple shepherd girl can love as well.
Let those who rule on Persia's jewel'd throne 65
Be famed for love, and gentlest love alone ;

Or wreathe, like Abbas, full of fair renown,
The lover's myrtle with the warrior's crown.

O happy days ! the maids around her say ;

O haste, profuse of blessings, haste away ! 70

‘ Be every youth like royal Abbas moved,

‘ And every Georgian maid like Abra loved !’

ECLOGUE IV.

AGIB AND SECANDER ; OR, THE FUGITIVES.

SCENE, A mountain in Circassia.

TIME, Midnight.

IN fair Circassia, where, to love inclined,
Each swain was blest, for every maid was kind ;
At that still hour, when awful midnight reigns,
And none, but wretches, haunt the twilight plains ;
What time the moon had hung her lamp on high, 5 -
And past in radiance through the cloudless sky ; -
Sad, o'er the dews, two brother shepherds fled,
Where wildering fear and desperate sorrow led :
Fast as they press'd their flight, behind them lay
Wide ravaged plains, and valleys stole away : 10
Along the mountain's bending sides they ran,
Till, faint and weak, Secander thus began.

SECANDER.

O stay thee, Agib, for my feet deny,
No longer friendly to my life, to fly.
Friend of my heart, O turn thee and survey ! 15
Trace our sad flight through all its length of way

And first review that long extended plain,
And yon wide groves, already past with pain!
Yon ragged cliff, whose dangerous path we tried!
And, last, this lofty mountain's weary side! 20

AGIB.

Weak as thou art, yet, hapless, must thou know
The toils of flight, or some severer woe!
Still, as I haste, the Tartar shouts behind,
And shrieks and sorrows load the saddening wind:
In rage of heart, with ruin in his hand, 25
He blasts our harvests, and deforms our land.
Yon citron grove, whence first in fear we came,
Droops its fair honors to the conquering flame:
Far fly the swains, like us, in deep despair,
And leave to ruffian bands their fleecy care. 30

SECANDER.

Unhappy land, whose blessings tempt the sword,
In vain, unheard, thou call'st thy Persian lord!
In vain thou court'st him, helpless, to thine aid,
To shield the shepherd, and protect the maid!
Far off, in thoughtless indolence resign'd, 35
Soft dreams of love and pleasure soothe his mind:
'Midst fair sultanas lost in idle joy,
No wars alarm him, and no fears annoy.

AGIB.

Yet these green hills, in summer's sultry heat,
Have lent the monarch oft a cool retreat. 40

Sweet to the sight is Zabran's flowery plain,
And once by maids and shepherds loved in vain!
No more the virgins shall delight to rove
By Sargis' banks, or Irwan's shady grove;
On Tarkie's mountain catch the cooling gale, 45
Or breathe the sweets of Aly's flowery vale:
Fair scenes! but, ah! no more with peace possest,
With ease alluring, and with plenty blest!
No more the shepherds' whitening tents appear,
Nor the kind products of a bounteous year; 50
No more the date, with snowy blossoms crown'd!
But ruin spreads her baleful fires around.

SECANDER.

In vain Circassia boasts her spicy groves,
For ever famed for pure and happy loves:
In vain she boasts her fairest of the fair, 55
Their eyes' blue languish, and their golden hair!
Those eyes in tears their fruitless grief must send;
Those hairs the Tartar's cruel hand shall rend.

AGIB.

Ye Georgian swains, that piteous learn from far
Circassia's ruin, and the waste of war; 60
Some weightier arms than crooks and staves prepare,
To shield your harvests, and defend your fair:

VARIATIONS.

- Ver. 49. No more the shepherds' whitening seats appear,
51. No more the dale, with snowy blossoms crown'd!

The Turk and Tartar like designs pursue,
Fix'd to destroy, and steadfast to undo.
Wild as his land, in native deserts bred, 65
By lust incited, or by malice led,
The villain Arab, as he prowls for prey,
Oft marks with blood and wasting flames the way ;
Yet none so cruel as the Tartar foe,
To death inured, and nurst in scenes of woe. 70

He said ; when loud along the vale was heard
A shriller shriek, and nearer fires appear'd :
The affrighted shepherds, through the dews of night,
Wide o'er the moonlight hills renew'd their flight.

ODE TO PITY.

O THOU, the friend of man, assign'd
With balmy hands his wounds to bind,
And charm his frantic woe:
When first Distress, with dagger keen,
Broke forth to waste his destined scene, 5
His wild unsated foe!

By Pella's * bard, a magic name,
By all the griefs his thought could frame,
Receive my humble rite:
Long, Pity, let the nations view 10
The sky-worn robes of tenderest blue,
And eyes of dewy light!

* Euripides, of whom Aristotle pronounces, on a comparison of him with Sophocles, that he was the greater master of the tender passions, ἤν τραγικώτερος. C.

But wherefore need I wander wide
 To old Ilissus' distant side,
 Deserted stream, and mute? 15
 Wild Arun * too has heard thy strains,
 And Echo, 'midst my native plains,
 Been soothed by Pity's lute.

There first the wren thy myrtles shed
 On gentlest Otway's infant head, 20
 To him thy cell was shown;
 And while he sung the female heart,
 With youth's soft notes unspoil'd by art,
 Thy turtles mix'd their own.

Come, Pity, come, by Fancy's aid, 25
 E'en now my thoughts, relenting maid,
 Thy temple's pride design:
 Its southern site, its truth complete,
 Shall raise a wild enthusiast heat
 In all who view the shrine. 30

There Picture's toils shall well relate
 How chance, or hard involving fate,
 O'er mortal bliss prevail:
 The buskin'd Muse shall near her stand,
 And sighing prompt her tender hand, 35
 With each disastrous tale.

* The river Arun runs by the village of Trotton in Sussex, where Otway had his birth.

There let me oft, retired by day,

In dreams of passion melt away,

Allow'd with thee to dwell :

There waste the mournful lamp of night, 40

Till, Virgin, thou again delight

To hear a British shell !

ODE TO FEAR.

THOU, to whom the world unknown,
 With all its shadowy shapes, is shown ;
 Who seest, appall'd, the unreal scene,
 While Fancy lifts the veil between :

Ah Fear ! ah frantic Fear !

I see, I see thee near.

I know thy hurried step, thy haggard eye !
 Like thee I start ; like thee disorder'd fly.
 For, lo, what monsters in thy train appear !

Danger, whose limbs of giant mould

10

What mortal eye can fix'd behold ?

Who stalks his round, an hideous form,

Howling amidst the midnight storm ;

Or throws him on the ridgy steep

Of some loose hanging rock to sleep :

15

And with him thousand phantoms join'd,

Who prompt to deeds accursed the mind :

And those, the fiends, who, near allied,

O'er Nature's wounds, and wrecks, preside ;

Whilst Vengeance, in the lurid air,

20

Lifts her red arm, exposed and bare :

On whom that ravening* brood of Fate,

Who lap the blood of sorrow, wait :

* Alluding to the Kúvas áφυκτους of Sophocles. See the Electra. C.

Who, Fear, this ghastly train can see,
And look not madly wild, like thee!

25

EPODE.

In earliest Greece, to thee, with partial choice,
The grief-full Muse address her infant tongue;
The maids and matrons, on her awful voice,
Silent and pale, in wild amazement hung.

Yet he, the bard * who first invoked thy name, 30
Disdain'd in Marathon its power to feel:
For not alone he nursed the poet's flame,
But reach'd from Virtue's hand the patriot's steel.

But who is he whom later garlands grace,
Who left a while o'er Hybla's dew to rove, 35
With trembling eyes thy dreary steps to trace,
Where thou and furies shared the baleful grove?

Wrapt in thy cloudy veil, the incestuous † queen
Sigh'd the sad call ‡ her son and husband heard,
When once alone it broke the silent scene, 40
And he the wretch of Thebes no more appear'd.

* Æschylus. C.

† Jocasta. C.

‡ — οὐδ' ἔτ' ὠρώρει βοή,
Ἦν μὲν σιωπή· φθέγμα δ' ἐξαίφνης τινὸς
Θωύξεν αὐτόν, ὥστε πάντας ὀρθίας
Στήσαι φόβω δείσαντας ἐξαίφνης τρίχας.

See the Œdip. Colon. of Sophocles. C.

O Fear, I know thee by my throbbing heart :

Thy withering power inspired each mournful line :

Though gentle Pity claim her mingled part,

Yet all the thunders of the scene are thine ! 45

ANTISTROPHE.

Thou who such weary lengths hast past,

Where wilt thou rest, mad Nymph, at last ?

Say, wilt thou shroud in haunted cell,

Where gloomy Rape and Murder dwell ?

Or, in some hollow'd seat,

50

'Gainst which the big waves beat,

Hear drowning seamen's cries, in tempests brought ?

Dark power, with shuddering meek submitted
thought,

Be mine to read the visions old

Which thy awakening bards have told :

55

And, lest thou meet my blasted view,

Hold each strange tale devoutly true ;

Ne'er be I found, by thee o'erawed,

In that thrice hallow'd eve, abroad,

When ghosts, as cottage maids believe,

60

Their pebbled beds permitted leave ;

And goblins haunt, from fire, or fen,

Or mine, or flood, the walks of men !

O thou, whose spirit most possest

The sacred seat of Shakespeare's breast !

65

By all that from thy prophet broke,
In thy divine emotions spoke;
Hither again thy fury deal,
Teach me but once like him to feel:
His cypress wreath my meed decree,
And I, O Fear, will dwell with thee!

ODE TO SIMPLICITY

O THOU, by Nature taught
 To breathe her genuine thought,
 In numbers warmly pure, and sweetly strong;
 Who first, on mountains wild,
 In Fancy, loveliest child, 5
 Thy babe, or Pleasure's, nursed the powers of song!

Thou, who, with hermit heart,
 Disdain'st the wealth of art,
 And gauds, and pageant weeds, and trailing pall;
 But com'st a decent maid, 10
 In attic robe array'd,
 O chaste, unboastful Nymph, to thee I call!

By all the honey'd store
 On Hybla's thymy shore; 14
 By all her blooms, and mingled murmurs dear;
 By her* whose lovelorn woe,
 In evening musings slow,
 Soothed sweetly sad Electra's poet's ear:

* The ἀηδών, or nightingale, for which Sophocles seems to have entertained a peculiar fondness. C.

By old Cephisus deep,
Who spread his wavy sweep, 20
In warbled wanderings, round thy green retreat;
On whose enamel'd side,
When holy Freedom died,
No equal haunt allured thy future feet.

O sister meek of Truth, 25
To my admiring youth,
Thy sober aid and native charms infuse!
The flowers that sweetest breathe,
Though Beauty cull'd the wreath,
Still ask thy hand to range their order'd hues. 30

While Rome could none esteem
But virtue's patriot theme,
You lov'd her hills, and led her laureat band:
But staid to sing alone
To one distinguish'd throne; 35
And turn'd thy face, and fled her alter'd land.

No more, in hall or bower,
The Passions own thy power,
Love, only Love her forceless numbers mean:
For thou hast left her shrine; 40
Nor olive more, nor vine,
Shall gain thy feet to bless the servile scene.

Though taste, though genius, bless
To some divine excess,

Faints the cold work till thou inspire the whole ;
What each, what all supply, 46
May court, may charm, our eye ;
Thou, only thou, canst raise the meeting soul !

Of these let others ask,
To aid some mighty task, 50
I only seek to find thy temperate vale ;
Where oft my reed might sound
To maids and shepherds round,
And all thy sons, O Nature, learn my tale.

ODE ON THE POETICAL CHARACTER.

As once, — if, not with light regard,
 I read aright that gifted bard,
 — Him whose school above the rest
 His loveliest elfin queen has blest; —
 One, only one, unrival'd* fair, 5
 Might hope the magic girdle wear,
 At solemn turney hung on high,
 The wish of each love-darting eye;

— Lo! to each other nymph, in turn, applied,
 As if, in air unseen, some hovering hand, 10
 Some chaste and angel friend to virgin fame,
 With whisper'd spell had burst the starting band,
 It left unblest her loathed dishonour'd side;
 Happier, hopeless Fair, if never
 Her baffled hand, with vain endeavour, 15
 Had touch'd that fatal zone to her denied!
 Young Fancy thus, to me divinest name,
 To whom, prepared and bathed in heaven,
 The cest of amplest power is given:
 To few the godlike gift assigns, 20
 To gird their blest prophetic loins,
 And gaze her visions wild, and feel unmix'd her flame!

* Florimel. See Spenser, Leg. 4th. C.

The band, as fairy legends say,
Was wove on that creating day,
When He, who call'd with thought to birth 25
Yon tented sky, this laughing earth,
And dress'd with springs and forests tall,
And pour'd the main engirting all,
Long by the loved enthusiast woo'd,
Himself in some diviner mood, 30
Retiring, sat with her alone,
And placed her on his sapphire throne;
The whiles, the vaulted shrine around,
Seraphic wires were heard to sound,
Now sublimest triumph swelling, 35
Now on love and mercy dwelling;
And she, from out the veiling cloud,
Breathed her magic notes aloud:
And thou, thou rich-hair'd youth of morn,
And all thy subject life was born! 40
The dangerous passions kept aloof,
Far from the sainted growing woof:
But near it sat ecstatic Wonder,
Listening the deep applauding thunder;
And Truth, in sunny vest array'd, 45
By whose the tarsel's eyes were made;
All the shadowy tribes of mind,
In braided dance, their murmurs join'd,
And all the bright uncounted powers
Who feed on heaven's ambrosial flowers. 50
— Where is the bard whose soul can now
Its high presuming hopes avow?

Where he who thinks, with rapture blind,
This hallow'd work for him design'd ?

High on some cliff, to heaven up-piled, 55
Of rude access, of prospect wild,
Where, tangled round the jealous steep,
Strange shades o'erbrow the valleys deep,
And holy Genii guard the rock,
Its glooms embrown, its springs unlock, 60
While on its rich ambitious head,
An Eden, like his own, lies spread :
I view that oak, the fancied glades among,
By which, as Milton lay, his evening ear,
From many a cloud that dropp'd ethereal dew, 65
Nigh spher'd in heaven, its native strains could hear ;

On which that ancient trump he reach'd was hung :
Thither oft, his glory greeting,
From Waller's myrtle shades retreating,
With many a vow from Hope's aspiring tongue,
My trembling feet his guiding steps pursue ; 71
In vain — Such bliss to one alone,
Of all the sons of soul, was known ;
And Heaven, and Fancy, kindred powers,
Have now o'erturn'd the inspiring bowers ; 75
Or curtain'd close such scene from every future view.

ODE,

WRITTEN IN THE BEGINNING OF THE YEAR 1746.

How sleep the brave, who sink to rest,
 By all their country's wishes bless'd !
 When Spring, with dewy fingers cold,
 Returns to deck their hallow'd mould,
 She there shall dress a sweeter sod 5
 Than Fancy's feet have ever trod.

By fairy hands their knell is rung;
 By forms unseen their dirge is sung;
 There Honour comes, a pilgrim gray,
 To bless the turf that wraps their clay; 10
 And Freedom shall awhile repair,
 To dwell a weeping hermit there !

VARIATIONS.

- Ver. 5. She then shall dress a sweeter sod
 7. By hands unseen the knell is rung;
 8. By fairy forms their dirge is sung;

ODE TO MERCY.

STROPHE.

O THOU, who sitt'st a smiling bride
 By Valour's arm'd and awful side,
 Gentlest of sky-born forms, and best adored;
 Who oft with songs, divine to hear,
 Winn'st from his fatal grasp the spear, 6
 And hidest in wreaths of flowers his bloodless sword!
 Thou who, amidst the deathful field,
 By godlike chiefs alone beheld,
 Oft with thy bosom bare art found, 9
 Pleading for him the youth who sinks to ground:
 See, Mercy, see, with pure and loaded hands,
 Before thy shrine my country's genius stands,
 And decks thy altar still, though pierced with many a wound.

ANTISTROPHE.

When he whom even our joys provoke,
 The fiend of nature join'd his yoke, 15
 And rush'd in wrath to make our isle his prey;
 Thy form, from out thy sweet abode,
 O'ertook him on his blasted road,
 And stopp'd his wheels, and look'd his rage away.

I see recoil his sable steeds, 20
That bore him swift to salvage deeds,
Thy tender melting eyes they own ;
O maid, for all thy love to Britain shown,
Where Justice bars her iron tower,
To thee we build a roseate bower ; 25
Thou, thou shalt rule our queen, and share our monarch's throne !

ODE TO LIBERTY.

STROPHE.

WHO shall awake the Spartan fire,
 And call in solemn sounds to life,
 The youths, whose locks divinely spreading,
 Like vernal hyacinths in sullen hue,
 At once the breath of fear and virtue shedding, 5
 Applauding Freedom loved of old to view?
 What new Alcæus,* fancy-blest,
 Shall sing the sword, in myrtles drest,

* Alluding to that beautiful fragment of Alcæus:

Εν μύρτου κλαδί τὸ ξίφος φορήσω,
 Ὡς περ Ἀρμόδιος κ' Ἀριστογείτων,
 Ὃτε τὸν τύραννον κτανέτην,
 Ἰσονόμους τ' Ἀθήνας ἐποίησάτην.

 Νήσοις δ' ἐν μακάρων σε φασὶν εἶναι,
 Ἰνα περ ποδώκης Ἀχιλεὺς,
 Τυδείδην τε φασὶν Διομήδεα.
 Εν μύρτου κλαδί τὸ ξίφος φορήσω,
 Ὡς περ Ἀρμόδιος κ' Ἀριστογείτων,
 Ὃτ' Ἀθηναίης ἐν θυσίαις
 Ἄνδρα τύραννον Ἰππαρχον ἐκαινέτην.
 Αἰὲ σφῶν κλέος ἔσσεται κατ' αἶαν,
 Φίλταθ' Ἀρμόδιε, κ' Ἀριστόγείτων,
 Ὃτι τὸν τύραννον κτάνετον,
 Ἰσονόμους τ' Ἀθήνας ἐποίησατον.

At Wisdom's shrine awhile its flame concealing,
 (What place so fit to seal a deed renown'd?) 10
 Till she her brightest lightnings round revealing,
 It leap'd in glory forth, and dealt her prompted wound!

O goddess, in that feeling hour,
 When most its sounds would court thy ears,
 Let not my shell's misguided power * 15
 E'er draw thy sad, thy mindful tears.
 No, Freedom, no, I will not tell
 How Rome, before thy weeping face,
 With heaviest sound, a giant-statue, fell,
 Push'd by a wild and artless race 20
 From off its wide ambitious base,
 When Time his northern sons of spoil awoke,
 And all the blended work of strength and grace,
 With many a rude repeated stroke,
 And many a barbarous yell, to thousand fragments broke. 25

EPODE.

Yet, even where'er the least appear'd,
 The admiring world thy hand revered ;
 Still, 'midst the scatter'd states around,
 Some remnants of her strength were found ;
 They saw, by what escaped the storm, 30
 How wondrous rose her perfect form ;

* Μὴ μὴ ταῦτα λέγωμες, ἃ δάκρυον ἤγαγε Διοί.

Callimach. Ὕμνος εἰς Δήμητρα. C.

How in the great, the labour'd whole,
 Each mighty master pour'd his soul !
 For sunny Florence, seat of art,
 Beneath her vines preserved a part, 35
 Till they,* whom Science loved to name,
 (O who could fear it?) quench'd her flame.
 And lo, an humbler relic laid
 In jealous Pisa's olive shade !
 See small Marino† joins the theme, 40
 Though least, not last in thy esteem :
 Strike, louder strike the ennobling strings
 To those,‡ whose merchant sons were kings ;
 To him,§ who, deck'd with pearly pride,
 In Adria weds his green-hair'd bride ; 45
 Hail, port of glory, wealth, and pleasure,
 Ne'er let me change this Lydian measure :
 Nor e'er her former pride relate,
 To sad Liguria's|| bleeding state.
 Ah no ! more pleased thy haunts I seek, 50
 On wild Helvetia's¶ mountains bleak :
 (Where, when the favour'd of thy choice,
 The daring archer heard thy voice ;
 Forth from his eyrie roused in dread,
 The ravening eagle northward fled :) 55

 The magic works, thou feel'st the strains, 60
 One holier name alone remains ;
 The perfect spell shall then avail,
 Hail, nymph, adored by Britain, hail !

ANTISTROPHE.

Beyond the measure vast of thought,
 The works the wizard time has wrought ! 65
 The Gaul, 'tis held of antique story,
 Saw Britain link'd to his now adverse strand,‡
 No sea between, nor cliff sublime and hoary,
 He pass'd with unwet feet through all our land.
 To the blown Baltic then, they say, 70
 The wild waves found another way,

* The Dutch, amongst whom there are very severe penalties for those who are convicted of killing this bird. They are kept tame in almost all their towns, and particularly at the Hague, of the arms of which they make a part. The common people of Holland are said to entertain a superstitious sentiment, that if the whole species of them should become extinct, they should lose their liberties. C.

† Queen Elizabeth. C.

‡ This tradition is mentioned by several of our old historians. Some naturalists too have endeavoured to support the probability of the fact by arguments drawn from the correspondent disposition of the two opposite coasts. I do not remember that any poetical use has been hitherto made of it. C.

Where Orcas howls, his wolfish mountains rounding;

Till all the banded west at once 'gan rise,
A wide wild storm even nature's self confounding,
Withering her giant sons with strange uncouth
surprise. 75

This pillar'd earth so firm and wide,
By winds and inward labours torn,
In thunders dread was push'd aside,
And down the shouldering billows borne.
And see, like gems, her laughing train, 80
The little isles on every side,
Mona,* once hid from those who search the main,
Where thousand elfin shapes abide,
And Wight who checks the westering tide,
For thee consenting heaven has each bestow'd, 85
A fair attendant on her sovereign pride:
To thee this blest divorce she owed,
For thou hast made her vales thy loved, thy last abode!

* There is a tradition in the Isle of Man, that a mermaid becoming enamoured of a young man of extraordinary beauty took an opportunity of meeting him one day as he walked on the shore, and opened her passion to him, but was received with a coldness, occasioned by his horror and surprise at her appearance. This, however, was so misconstrued by the sea lady, that, in revenge for his treatment of her, she punished the whole island by covering it with a mist: so that all who attempted to carry on any commerce with it, either never arrived at it, but wandered up and down the sea, or were on a sudden wrecked upon its cliffs. C.

SECOND EPODE.

Then too, 'tis said, an hoary pile,
 'Midst the green navel of our isle, 90
 Thy shrine in some religious wood,
 O soul-enforcing goddess, stood !
 There oft the painted native's feet
 Were wont thy form celestial meet :
 Though now with hopeless toil we trace 95
 Time's backward rolls, to find its place ;
 Whether the fiery-tresséd Dane,
 Or Roman's self o'erturn'd the fane,
 Or in what heaven-left age it fell,
 'Twere hard for modern song to tell. 100
 Yet still, if Truth those beams infuse,
 Which guide at once, and charm the Muse,
 Beyond yon braided clouds that lie,
 Paving the light embroider'd sky,
 Amidst the bright pavilion'd plains, 105
 The beauteous model still remains.
 There, happier than in islands blest,
 Or bowers by spring or Hebe drest,
 The chiefs who fill our Albion's story,
 In warlike weeds, retired in glory, 110
 Hear their consorted Druids sing
 Their triumphs to the immortal string.
 How may the poet now unfold
 What never tongue or numbers told ?
 How learn'd delighted, and amazed, 115
 What hands unknown that fabric raised ?

Even now before his favour'd eyes,
In gothic pride, it seems to rise !
Yet Græcia's graceful orders join,
Majestic through the mix'd design : 120
The secret builder knew to choose
Each sphere-found gem of richest hues ;
Whate'er heaven's purer mould contains,
When nearer suns emblaze its veins ;
There on the walls the patriot's sight 125
May ever hang with fresh delight,
And, graved with some prophetic rage,
Read Albion's fame through every age.

Ye forms divine, ye laureat band,
That near her inmost altar stand ! 130
Now soothe her to her blissful train
Blithe Concord's social form to gain ;
Concord, whose myrtle wand can steep
Even Anger's bloodshot eyes in sleep ;
Before whose breathing bosom's balm 135
Rage drops his steel, and storms grow calm :
Her let our sires and matrons hoar
Welcome to Briton's ravaged shore ;
Our youths, enamour'd of the fair,
Play with the tangles of her hair, 140
Till, in one loud applauding sound,
The nations shout to her around,
O how supremely art thou blest,
Thou, lady — thou shalt rule the west !

ODE TO A LADY,

ON THE DEATH OF COLONEL ROSS, IN THE ACTION OF FONTENOY.

Written in May, 1745.

WHILE, lost to all his former mirth,
 Britannia's genius bends to earth,
 And mourns the fatal day :
 While stain'd with blood he strives to tear
 Unseemly from his sea-green hair
 The wreaths of cheerful May :

5

The thoughts which musing Pity pays,
 And fond Remembrance loves to raise,
 Your faithful hours attend ;
 Still Fancy, to herself unkind,
 Awakes to grief the soften'd mind,
 And points the bleeding friend.

10

By rapid Scheld's descending wave
 His country's vows shall bless the grave,

VARIATION.

Ver. 4. While sunk in grief he strives to tear

Where'er the youth is laid : 15
 That sacred spot the village hind
 With every sweetest turf shall bind,
 And Peace protect the shade.

Blest youth, regardful of thy doom,
 Aërial hands shall build thy tomb, 20
 With shadowy trophies crown'd ;
 Whilst Honour bathed in tears shall rove
 To sigh thy name through every grove,
 And call his heroes round.

The warlike dead of every age, 25
 Who fill the fair recording page,
 Shall leave their sainted rest ;
 And, half reclining on his spear,
 Each wondering chief by turns appear,
 To hail the blooming guest : 30

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 19. E'en now regardful of his doom
 Applauding Honour haunts his tomb,
 With shadowy trophies crown'd :
 Whilst Freedom's form beside her roves,
 Majestic through the twilight groves,
 And calls her heroes round.

19. O'er him, whose doom thy virtues grieve,
 Aërial forms shall sit at eve,
 And bend the pensive head ;
 And, fallen to save his injured land,
 Imperial Honour's awful hand
 Shall point his lonely bed.

Old Edward's sons, unknown to yield,
 Shall crowd from Cressy's laurel'd field,
 And gaze with fix'd delight ;
 Again for Britain's wrongs they feel,
 Again they snatch the gleamy steel,
 And wish the avenging fight.

35

But lo, where, sunk in deep despair,
 Her garments torn, her bosom bare,
 Impatient Freedom lies !
 Her matted tresses madly spread,
 To every sod, which wraps the dead,
 She turns her joyless eyes.

40

Ne'er shall she leave that lowly ground
 Till notes of triumph bursting round
 Proclaim her reign restored :
 Till William seek the sad retreat,
 And, bleeding at her sacred feet,
 Present the sated sword.

45

If, weak to soothe so soft a heart,
 These pictured glories nought impart,
 To dry thy constant tear :
 If, yet, in Sorrow's distant eye,
 Exposed and pale thou see'st him lie,
 Wild War insulting near :

50

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 31 Old Edward's sons, untaught to yield,
 49. If, drawn by all a lover's art,

ON THE DEATH OF COLONEL ROSS. 47

Where'er from time thou court'st relief, 55
The Muse shall still, with social grief,
Her gentlest promise keep ;

Shall learn the sad repeated tale,
And bid her shepherds weep. 60

ODE TO EVENING.

If aught of oaten stop, or pastoral song,
 May hope, chaste Eve, to soothe thy modest ear,
 Like thy own brawling springs,
 Thy springs, and dying gales ; 4

O Nymph reserved, while now the bright-hair'd sun
 Sits in yon western tent, whose cloudy skirts,
 With brede ethereal wove,
 O'erhang his wavy bed :

Now air is hush'd, save where the weak-eyed bat
 With short shrill shriek flits by on leathern wing ;
 Or where the beetle winds
 His small but sullen horn,

VARIATIONS.

- Ver 2. May hope, O pensive Eve, to soothè thine ear,
 3. Like thy own solemn springs,
 9. While air is hush'd, save where the weak-eyed bat

As oft he rises 'midst the twilight path,
 Against the pilgrim borne in heedless hum :
 Now teach me, maid composed, 15
 To breathe some soften'd strain,

Whose numbers, stealing through thy darkening
 vale,
 May not unseemly with its stillness suit ;
 As, musing slow, I hail
 Thy genial loved return ! 20

For when thy folding-star arising shows
 His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
 The fragrant Hours, and Elves
 Who slept in buds the day,

And many a Nymph who wreathes her brows with sedge, 25
 And sheds the freshening dew, and, lovelier still.
 The pensive Pleasures sweet,
 Prepare thy shadowy car.

Then let me rove some wild and heathy scene ;
 Or find some ruin, 'midst its dreary dells, 30

VARIATIONS.

- Ver. 24. Who slept in flowers the day,
 29. Then lead, calm vot'ress, where some sheety lake
 Cheers the lone heath, or some time-hallow'd pile,

Whose walls more awful nod
By thy religious gleams.

Or, if chill blustering winds, or driving rain,
Prevent my willing feet, be mine the hut,
That, from the mountain's side, 35
Views wilds, and swelling floods,

And hamlets brown, and dim-discover'd spires ;
And hears their simple bell, and marks o'er all
Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil. 40

While Spring shall pour his showers, as oft he wont,
And bathe thy breathing tresses, meekest Eve !
While Summer loves to sport
Beneath thy lingering light ;

While fallow Autumn fills thy lap with leaves ; 45
Or Winter, yelling through the troublous air,
Affrights thy shrinking train,
And rudely rends thy robes ;

VARIATIONS.

- Var. 31. Or upland fallows grey,
Reflect its last cool gleam.
33. But when chill blustering winds, or driving rain,
Forbid my willing feet, be mine the hut,

So long, regardful of thy quiet rule, 49
Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, smiling Peace,
Thy gentlest influence own,
And love thy favourite name!

VARIATION.

Ver. 49. So long, sure-found beneath the sylvan shed,
Shall Fancy, Friendship, Science, rose-lipp'd Health,
Thy gentlest influence own,
And hymn thy favourite name!

ODE TO PEACE.

O THOU, who bad'st thy turtles bear
 Swift from his grasp thy golden hair,
 And sought'st thy native skies ;
 When War, by vultures drawn from far,
 To Britain bent his iron car, 5
 And bade his storms arise !

Tired of his rude tyrannic sway,
 Our youth shall fix some festive day,
 His sullen shrines to burn :
 But thou who hear'st the turning spheres, 10
 What sounds may charm thy partial ears,
 And gain thy blest return !

O Peace, thy injured robes up-bind !
 O rise ! and leave not one behind
 Of all thy beamy train ; 15
 The British Lion, goddess sweet,
 Lies stretch'd on earth to kiss thy feet,
 And own thy holier reign.

Let others court thy transient smile,
But come to grace thy western isle.

20

By warlike Honour led;
And, while around her ports rejoice,
While all her sons adore thy choice,
With him for ever wed!

THE MANNERS.

AN ODE.

FAREWELL, for clearer ken design'd,
 The dim-discover'd tracts of mind ;
 Truths which, from action's paths retired,
 My silent search in vain required !
 No more my sail that deep explores ; 5
 No more I search those magic shores ;
 What regions part the world of soul,
 Or whence thy streams, Opinion, roll :
 If e'er I round such fairy field,
 Some power impart the spear and shield, 10
 At which the wizard Passions fly ;
 By which the giant Follies die !

Farewell the porch whose roof is seen
 Arch'd with the enlivening olive's green :
 Where Science, prank'd in tissued vest, 15
 By Reason, Pride, and Fancy drest,
 Comes, like a bride, so trim array'd,
 To wed with Doubt in Plato's shade !

Youth of the quick uncheated sight,
 Thy walks, Observance, more invite ! 20

O thou who lovest that ampler range,
Where life's wide prospects round thee change,
And, with her mingling sons allied,
Throw'st the prattling page aside,
To me, in converse sweet, impart 25
To read in man the native heart;
To learn, where Science sure is found,
From Nature as she lives around;
And, gazing oft her mirror true,
By turns each shifting image view! 30
Till meddling Art's officious lore
Reverse the lessons taught before;
Alluring from a safer rule,
To dream in her enchanted school:
Thou, Heaven, whate'er of great we boast, 35
Hast blest this social science most.

Retiring hence to thoughtful cell,
As Fancy breathes her potent spell,
Not vain she finds the charming task,
In pageant quaint, in motley mask; 40
Behold, before her musing eyes,
The countless Manners round her rise;
While, ever varying as they pass,
To some Contempt applies her glass:
With these the white-robed maids combine; 45
And those the laughing satyrs join!
But who is he whom now she views,
In robe of wild contending hues?

Thou by the Passions nursed, I greet
 The comic sock that binds thy feet ! 50
 O Humour, thou whose name is known
 To Britain's favour'd isle alone :
 Me too amidst thy band admit ;
 There where the young-eyed healthful Wit,
 (Whose jewels in his crispéd hair 55
 Are placed each other's beams to share ;
 Whom no delights from thee divide)
 In laughter loosed, attends thy side.

By old Miletus,* who so long
 Has ceased his love-inwoven song ; 60
 By all you taught the Tuscan maids,
 In changed Italia's modern shades ;
 By him † whose knight's distinguish'd name
 Refined a nation's lust of fame ;
 Whose tales e'en now, with echoes sweet, 65
 Castilia's Moorish hills repeat ;
 Or him ‡ whom Seine's blue nymphs deplore,
 In watchet weeds on Gallia's shore ;
 Who drew the sad Sicilian maid,
 By virtues in her sire betray'd. 70

* Alluding to the Milesian tales, some of the earliest romances. C.

O Nature boon, from whom proceed
Each forceful thought, each prompted deed ;
If but from thee I hope to feel,
On all my heart imprint thy seal !
Let some retreating cynic find 75
Those oft-turn'd scrolls I leave behind :
The Sports and I this hour agree,
To rove thy scene-full world with thee !

THE PASSIONS.

AN ODE FOR MUSIC.

Performed at Oxford, with Hayes's music, in 1750.

WHEN Music, heavenly maid, was young,
 While yet in early Greece she sung,
 The Passions oft, to hear her shell,
 Throng'd around her magic cell,
 Exulting, trembling, raging, fainting, 5
 Possest beyond the Muse's painting:
 By turns they felt the glowing mind
 Disturb'd, delighted, raised, refined;
 Till once, 'tis said, when all were fired,
 Fill'd with fury, rapt, inspired, 10
 From the supporting myrtles round
 They snatch'd her instruments of sound;
 And, as they oft had heard apart
 Sweet lessons of her forceful art,
 Each (for Madness ruled the hour) 15
 Would prove his own expressive power.

First Fear his hand, its skill to try,
 Amid the chords bewilder'd laid,
 And back recoil'd, he knew not why,
 E'en at the sound himself had made. 20

Next Anger rush'd ; his eyes on fire,
In lightnings own'd his secret stings :
In one rude clash he struck the lyre,
And swept with hurried hand the strings.

With woful measures wan Despair 25
Low, sullen sounds his grief beguiled ;
A solemn, strange, and mingled air ;
'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.

But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
What was thy delighted measure? 30
Still it whisper'd promised pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail !
Still would her touch the strain prolong ;
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
She call'd on Echo still, through all the song ; 35
And, where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close,
And Hope enchanted smiled, and waved her golden hair.

And longer had she sung ; — but, with a frown,
Revenge impatient rose : 40
He threw his blood-stain'd sword, in thunder, down ;
And, with a withering look,
The war-denouncing trumpet took,

VARIATION.

Ver. 30. What was thy delightful measure?

And blew a blast so loud and dread,
Were ne'er prophetic sounds so full of woe! 45
 And, ever and anon, he beat
 The doubling drum, with furious heat;
And though sometimes, each dreary pause between,
 Dejected Pity, at his side,
 Her soul-subduing voice applied, 50
 Yet still he kept his wild unalter'd mein,
While each strain'd ball of sight seem'd bursting from his head.
Thy numbers, Jealousy, to nought were fix'd;
 Sad proof of thy distressful state; 54
Of differing themes the veering song was mix'd;
 And now it courted Love, now raving call'd on Hate.

With eyes upraised, as one inspired,
Pale Melancholy sate retired;
And, from her wild sequester'd seat,
In notes by distance made more sweet, 60
Pour'd through the mellow horn her pensive soul:
 And, dashing soft from rocks around,
 Bubbling runnels join'd the sound;
Through glades and glooms the mingled measure stole, 64
Or, o'er some haunted stream, with fond delay,
 Round an holy calm diffusing,
 Love of Peace, and lonely musing,
In hollow murmurs died away.

But O ! how alter'd was its sprightlier tone,
When Cheerfulness, a nymph of healthiest hue,
Her bow across her shoulder flung, 71
Her buskins gemm'd with morning dew,
Blew an inspiring air, that dale and thicket rung,
The hunter's call, to Faun and Dryad known!
The oak-crown'd Sisters, and their chaste-eyed
Queen, 75
Satyrs and Sylvan Boys, were seen,
Peeping from forth their alleys green :
Brown Exercise rejoiced to hear ;
And Sport leapt up, and seized his beechen spear.
Last came Joy's ecstatic trial : 80
He, with viny crown advancing,
First to the lively pipe his hand addrest ;
But soon he saw the brisk awakening viol,
Whose sweet entrancing voice he loved the best ;
They would have thought who heard the strain 85
They saw, in Tempe's vale, her native maids,
Amidst the festal sounding shades,
To some unwearied minstrel dancing,
While, as his flying fingers kiss'd the strings, 89
Love framed with Mirth a gay fantastic round :
Loose were her tresses seen, her zone unbound ;
And he, amidst his frolic play,
As if he would the charming air repay,
Shook thousand odours from his dewy wings.

O Music! sphere-descended maid, 95
Friend of Pleasure, Wisdom's aid !

Why, goddess! why, to us denied,
Lay'st thou thy ancient lyre aside?
As, in that loved Athenian bower,
You learn'd an all commanding power, 100
Thy mimic soul, O Nymph endear'd,
Can well recall what then it heard;
Where is thy native simple heart,
Devote to Virtue, Fancy, Art?
Arise, as in that elder time, 105
Warm, energetic, chaste, sublime!
Thy wonders, in that godlike age,
Fill thy recording Sister's page —
'Tis said, and I believe the tale,
Thy humblest reed could more prevail, 110
Had more of strength, diviner rage,
Than all which charms this laggard age;
E'en all at once together found,
Cecilia's mingled world of sound —
O bid our vain endeavours cease; 115
Revive the just designs of Greece:
Return in all thy simple state!
Confirm the tales her sons relate!

ODE ON THE DEATH OF THOMSON.

THE SCENE IS SUPPOSED TO LIE ON THE THAMES NEAR RICHMOND.

In yonder grave a Druid lies,
 Where slowly winds the stealing wave;
 The year's best sweets shall duteous rise
 To deck its poet's sylvan grave.

In yon deep bed of whispering reeds 5
 His airy harp* shall now be laid,
 That he, whose heart in sorrow bleeds,
 May love through life the soothing shade.

Then maids and youths shall linger here,
 And while its sounds at distance swell, 10
 Shall sadly seem in pity's ear
 To hear the woodland pilgrim's knell.

* The harp of Æolus, of which see a description in the Castle of Indolence. C.

Remembrance oft shall haunt the shore
 When Thames in summer wreaths is drest,
 And oft suspend the dashing oar, 15
 To bid his gentle spirit rest !

And oft, as ease and health retire
 To breezy lawn, or forest deep,
 The friend shall view yon whitening* spire
 And 'mid the varied landscape weep. 20

But thou, who own'st that earthy bed,
 Ah ! what will every dirge avail ;
 Or tears, which love and pity shed,
 That mourn beneath the gliding sail ?

Yet lives there one, whose heedless eye 25
 Shall scorn thy pale shrine glimmering near ?
 With him, sweet bard, may fancy die,
 And joy desert the blooming year.

But thou, lorn stream, whose sullen tide
 No sedge-crown'd sisters now attend, 30
 Now waft me from the green hill's side,
 Whose cold turf hides the buried friend !

VARIATION.

Ver. 21. But thou who own'st that earthly bed,

* Richmond Church, in which Thomson was buried. C.

And see, the fairy valleys fade ;

Dun night has veil'd the solemn view !

Yet once again, dear parted shade, 35

Meek Nature's Child, again adieu !

The genial meads,* assign'd to bless

Thy life, shall mourn thy early doom ;

Their hinds and shepherd-girls shall dress,

With simple hands, thy rural tomb. 40

Long, long, thy stone and pointed clay

Shall melt the musing Briton's eyes :

O ! vales and wild woods, shall he say,

In yonder grave your Druid lies !

* Mr. Thomson resided in the neighbourhood of Richmond some time before his death.

ODE ON THE POPULAR SUPERSTITIONS OF
THE HIGHLANDS OF SCOTLAND ;

CONSIDERED AS THE SUBJECT OF POETRY ; INSCRIBED TO MR. JOHN HOME.

I.

HOME, thou return'st from Thames, whose Naiads
long

Have seen thee lingering with a fond delay,
'Mid those soft friends, whose hearts, some future day,

Shall melt, perhaps, to hear thy tragic song.*

Go, not unmindful of that cordial youth† 5

Whom, long endear'd, thou leavest by Levant's
side ;

Together let us wish him lasting truth,

And joy untainted with his destined bride.

Go ! nor regardless, while these numbers boast

My short-lived bliss, forget my social name ; 10

But think, far off, how, on the southern coast,

I met thy friendship with an equal flame !

* How truly did Collins predict Home's tragic powers !

† A gentleman of the name of Barrow, who introduced
Home to Collins. Ed. 1788.

Fresh to that soil thou turn'st, where every vale
Shall prompt the poet, and his song demand :
To thee thy copious subjects ne'er shall fail ; 15
Thou need'st but take thy pencil to thy hand,
And paint what all believe, who own thy genial land.

II.

There must thou wake perforce thy Doric quill ;
'Tis Fancy's land to which thou sett'st thy feet :
Where still, 'tis said, the fairy people meet, 20
Beneath each birken shade, on mead or hill ;
There, each trim lass, that skims the milky store,
To the swart tribes their creamy bowls allots ;
By night they sip it round the cottage door,
While airy minstrels warble jocund notes. 25
There, every herd, by sad experience, knows
How, wing'd with fate, their elf-shot arrows fly.
When the sick ewe her summer food foregoes,
Or, stretch'd on earth, the heart-smit heifers lie.
Such airy beings awe the untutor'd swain : 30
Nor thou, though learn'd, his homelier thoughts neglect ;
Let thy sweet muse the rural faith sustain ;
These are the themes of simple, sure effect,
That add new conquests to her boundless reign,
And fill, with double force, her heart-commanding strain. 35

III.

E'en yet preserved, how often mayst thou hear,
 Where to the pole the Boreal mountains run,
 Taught by the father, to his listening son,
 Strange lays, whose power had charm'd a Spenser's ear.

At every pause, before thy mind possest, 40
 Old Runic bards shall seem to rise around,
 With uncouth lyres, in many-colour'd vest,
 Their matted hair with boughs fantastic crown'd:
 Whether thou bidst the well taught hind repeat
 The choral dirge, that mourns some chieftain brave, 45

When every shrieking maid her bosom beat,
 And strew'd with choicest herbs his scented grave!

Or whether, sitting in the shepherd's shiel,*
 Thou hear'st some sounding tale of war's alarms;
 When at the bugle's call, with fire and steel, 50
 The sturdy clans pour'd forth their brawny swarms,
 And hostile brothers met, to prove each other's arms.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 44. Whether thou bidst the well taught hind relate

51. The sturdy clans pour'd forth their bony swarms,

* A summer hut, built in the high part of the mountains, to tend their flocks in the warm season, when the pasture is fine Ed. 1788.

IV.

'Tis thine to sing, how, framing hideous spells,
 In Sky's lone isle, the gifted wizard seer,
 Lodged in the wintry cave with Fate's fell spear,
 Or in the depth of Uist's dark forest dwells: 56
 How they, whose sight such dreary dreams
 engross,
 With their own visions oft astonish'd droop,
 When, o'er the watery strath, or quaggy moss,
 They see the gliding ghosts unbodied troop. 60
 Or, if in sports, or on the festive green,
 Their destined glance some fated youth descry,
 Who now, perhaps, in lusty vigour seen,
 And rosy health, shall soon lamented die.
 For them the viewless forms of air obey; 65
 Their bidding heed, and at their beck repair:
 They know what spirit brews the stormful day,
 And heartless, oft like moody madness, stare
 To see the phantom train their secret work prepare.

V.

To monarchs dear, some hundred miles astray, 70
 Oft have they seen Fate give the fatal blow!
 The seer, in Sky, shriek'd as the blood did flow,
 When headless Charles warm on the scaffold lay!

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 56. Or in the gloom of Uist's dark forest dwells:

58. With their own visions oft afflicted droop,

66 Their bidding mark, and at their beck repair:

As Boreas threw his young Aurora * forth,
 In the first year of the first George's reign, 75
 And battles raged in welkin of the North,
 They mourn'd in air, fell, fell Rebellion slain!
 And as, of late, they joy'd in Preston's fight,
 Saw, at sad Falkirk, all their hopes near crown'd!
 They raved! divining, through their second sight, †
 Pale, red Culloden, where these hopes were drown'd! 81
 Illustrious William! ‡ Britain's guardian name!
 One William saved us from a tyrant's stroke;
 He, for a sceptre, gain'd heroic fame,
 But thou, more glorious, Slavery's chain hast
 broke, 85
 To reign a private man, and bow to Freedom's yoke!

VI.

These, too, thou'lt sing! for well thy magic muse
 Can to the topmost heaven of grandeur soar;
 Or stoop to wail the swain that is no more!
 Ah, homely swains! your homeward steps ne'er lose; 90

* By young Aurora, Collins undoubtedly meant the first appearance of the northern lights, which happened about the year 1715; at least it is most highly probable, from this peculiar circumstance, that no ancient writer whatever has taken any notice of them, nor even any modern one, previous to the above period. Ed. 1788.

† Second sight is the term that is used for the divination of the highlanders. Ed. 1788.

‡ The late Duke of Cumberland, who defeated the Pretender at the battle of Culloden. Ed. 1788.

Let not dank Will * mislead you to the heath ;
 Dancing in mirky night, o'er fen and lake,
 He glows, to draw you downward to your death,
 In his bewitch'd, low, marshy, willow brake !
 What though far off, from some dark dell espied, 95
 His glimmering mazes cheer the excursive sight,
 Yet turn, ye wanderers, turn your steps aside,
 Nor trust the guidance of that faithless light ;
 For watchful, lurking, 'mid the unrustling reed,
 At those mirk hours the wily monster lies, 100
 And listens oft to hear the passing steed,
 And frequent round him rolls his sullen eyes,
 If chance his savage wrath may some weak wretch surprise.

VII.

Ah, luckless swain, o'er all unblest, indeed !
 Whom late bewilder'd in the dank, dark fen, 105
 Far from his flocks, and smoking hamlet, then !
 To that sad spot where hums the sedgy weed :
 On him, enraged, the fiend, in angry mood,
 Shall never look with pity's kind concern,
 But instant, furious, raise the whelming flood 110
 O'er its drown'd banks, forbidding all return !

VARIATION.

Ver. 100. At those sad hours the wily monster lies ;

111. O'er its drowned bank, forbidding all return !

* A fiery meteor, called by various names, such as Will with the Wisp, Jack with the Lantern, etc. It hovers in the air over marshy and fenny places. Ed. 1788.

Or, if he meditate his wish'd escape,
 To some dim hill, that seems uprising near,
 To his faint eye the grim and grisly shape,
 In all its terrors clad, shall wild appear. 115

Meantime the watery surge shall round him rise,
 Pour'd sudden forth from every swelling source !

What now remains but tears and hopeless sighs ?
 His fear-shook limbs have lost their youthly force,
 And down the waves he floats, a pale and breathless corse ! 120

VIII.

For him in vain his anxious wife shall wait,
 Or wander forth to meet him on his way ;
 For him in vain at to-fall of the day,
 His babes shall linger at the unclosing gate !
 Ah, ne'er shall he return ! Alone, if night 125
 Her travel'd limbs in broken slumbers steep,
 With drooping willows drest, his mournful sprite
 Shall visit sad, perchance, her silent sleep :
 Then he, perhaps, with moist and watery hand, 129
 Shall fondly seem to press her shuddering cheek,
 And with his blue swoln face before her stand,
 And, shivering cold, these piteous accents speak :

VARIATIONS.

- Ver. 124. His babes shall linger at the cottage gate !
 127. With dropping willows drest, his mournful sprite
 130. Shall seem to press her cold and shuddering cheek,

"Pursue, dear wife, thy daily toils pursue,
 At dawn or dusk, industrious as before ;
 Nor e'er of me one helpless thought renew, 135
 While I lie weltering on the osier'd shore,
 Drown'd by the Kelpie's * wrath, nor e'er shall aid thee more ! "

IX.

Unbounded is thy range ; with varied skill
 Thy muse may, like those feathery tribes which spring 139
 From their rude rocks, extend her skirting wing
 Round the moist marge of each cold Hebrid isle,
 To that hoar pile † which still its ruins shows :
 In whose small vaults a pigmy folk is found,
 Whose bones the delver with his spade upthrows,
 And culls them, wondering, from the hallow'd
 ground ! 145
 Or thither, ‡ where, beneath the showery west,
 The mighty kings of three fair realms are laid ;

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 133. Proceed, dear wife, thy daily toils pursue,
 135. Nor e'er of me one hapless thought renew,
 138. Unbounded is thy range ; with varied stile

* The water fiend.

† One of the Hebrides is called the Isle of Pigmies ; where it is reported, that several miniature bones of the human species have been dug up in the ruins of a chapel there.

‡ Icolmkill, one of the Hebrides, where near sixty of the ancient Scottish, Irish, and Norwegian kings are interred.

Once foes, perhaps, together now they rest,
 No slaves revere them, and no wars invade :
 Yet frequent now, at midnight's solemn hour, 150
 The rifted mounds their yawning cells unfold,
 And forth the monarchs stalk with sovereign power,
 In pageant robes, and wreath'd with sheeny
 gold,
 And on their twilight tombs aërial council hold.

X.

But, oh, o'er all, forget not Kilda's race, 155
 On whose bleak rocks, which brave the wasting tides,
 Fair Nature's daughter, Virtue, yet abides.
 Go! just, as they, their blameless manners trace!
 Then to my ear transmit some gentle song,
 Of those whose lives are yet sincere and plain, 160
 Their bounded walks the rugged cliffs along,
 And all their prospect but the wintry main.
 With sparing temperance, at the needful time,
 They drain the scented spring; or, hunger-prest,
 Along the Atlantic rock, undreading climb, 165
 And of its eggs despoil the solan's* nest.

VARIATION.

Ver. 164. They drain the sainted spring; or, hunger-prest,

* An aquatic bird like a goose, on the eggs of which the inhabitants of St. Kilda, another of the Hebrides, chiefly subsist. Ed. 1788.

Thus, blest in primal innocence, they live
 Sufficed, and happy with that frugal fare
 Which tasteful toil and hourly danger give.
 Hard is their shallow soil, and bleak and bare; 170
 Nor ever vernal bee was heard to murmur there!

XI.

Nor need'st thou blush that such false themes engage

Thy gentle mind, of fairer stores possesst;
 For not alone they touch the village breast,
 But fill'd, in elder time, the historic page. 175
 There, Shakespeare's self, with every garland
 crown'd,

Flew to those fairy climes his fancy sheen,
 In musing hour; his wayward sisters found,
 And with their terrors drest the magic scene. 179

From them he sung, when, 'mid his bold design,
 Before the Scot, afflicted, and aghast!

The shadowy kings of Banquo's fated line
 Through the dark cave in gleamy pageant pass'd.

Proceed! nor quit the tales which, simply told,
 Could once so well my answering bosom pierce;

Proceed, in forceful sounds, and colours bold,
 The native legends of thy land rehearse;
 To such adapt thy lyre, and suit thy powerful verse.

XII.

In scenes like these, which, daring to depart
 From sober truth, are still to nature true, 190

And call forth fresh delight to Fancy's view,
The heroic muse employ'd her Tasso's art !

How have I trembled, when, at Tancred's stroke,
Its gushing blood the gaping cypress pour'd ! 194

When each live plant with mortal accents spoke,
And the wild blast upheaved the vanish'd sword !

How have I sat, when piped the pensive wind,
To hear his harp by British Fairfax strung !

Prevailing poet ! whose undoubting mind
Believed the magic wonders which he sung ! 200

Hence, at each sound, imagination glows !
Hence, at each picture, vivid life starts here !

Hence his warm lay with softest sweetness flows !
Melting it flows, pure, murmuring, strong, and
clear,

And fills the impassion'd heart, and wins the harmonious ear ! 205

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 193. How have I trembled, when, at Tancred's side,
Like him I stalk'd, and all his passions felt ;
When charm'd by Ismen, through the forest wide,
Bark'd in each plant a talking spirit dwelt !

201. Hence, sure to charm, his early numbers flow,
Though strong, yet sweet —
Though faithful, sweet ; though strong, of simple kind.

Hence, with each theme, he bids the bosom glow,
While his warm lays an easy passage find,
Pour'd through each inmost nerve, and lull the harmonious ear.

204. Melting it flows, pure, numerous, strong, and clear,

XIII.

All hail, ye scenes that o'er my soul prevail!
 Ye splendid friths and lakes, which, far away,
 Are by smooth Annan * fill'd or pastoral Tay,*
 Or Don's * romantic springs at distance hail! 209
 The time shall come, when I, perhaps, may tread
 Your lowly glens, o'erhung with spreading broom;
 Or, o'er your stretching heaths, by Fancy led;
 Or, o'er your mountains creep, in awful gloom!
 Then will I dress once more the faded bower, 214
 Where Jonson † sat in Drummond's classic shade;
 Or crop, from Tiviotdale, each lyric flower,
 And mourn, on Yarrow's banks, where Willy's laid!
 Meantime, ye powers that on the plains which bore
 The cordial youth, on Lothian's plains, § attend!—
 Where'er Home dwells, on hill, or lowly moor, 220
 To him I lose, your kind protection lend,
 And, touch'd with love like mine, preserve my absent friend!

AN EPISTLE,

ADDRESSED TO SIR THOMAS HANMER, ON HIS EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.

SIR,

WHILE, born to bring the Muse's happier days
A patriot's hand protects a poet's lays,
While nursed by you she sees her myrtles bloom,
Green and unwither'd o'er his honour'd tomb;
Excuse her doubts, if yet she fears to tell 5
What secret transports in her bosom swell:
With conscious awe she hears the critic's fame,
And blushing hides her wreath at Shakespeare's name.

Hard was the lot those injured strains endured,
Unown'd by Science, and by years obscured: 10

VARIATIONS.

- Ver. 1. While, own'd by you, with smiles the Muse surveys
The expected triumph of her sweetest lays :
While, stretch'd at ease, she boasts your guardian aid,
Secure, and happy in her sylvan shade:
Excuse her fears, who scarce a verse bestows,
In just remembrance of the debt she owes ;
With conscious, &c.
- 9 Long slighted Fancy with a mother's care
Wept o'er his works, and felt the last despair :
Torn from her head, she saw the roses fall,
By all deserted, though admired by all :

Fair Fancy wept; and echoing sighs confess'd
 A fix'd despair in every tuneful breast.
 Not with more grief the afflicted swains appear,
 When wintry winds deform the plenteous year;
 When lingering frosts the ruin'd seats invade 15
 Where Peace resorted, and the Graces play'd.

Each rising art by just gradation moves,
 Toil builds on toil, and age on age improves:
 The Muse alone unequal dealt her rage, 19
 And graced with noblest pomp her earliest stage.
 Preserved through time, the speaking scenes impart
 Each changeful wish of Phædra's tortured heart;

VARIATION.

And "Oh!" she cried, "shall Science still resign
 Whate'er is Nature's, and whate'er is mine?
 Shall Taste and Art but show a cold regard,
 And scornful Pride reject the unletter'd bard?
 Ye myrtled nymphs, who own my gentle reign,
 Tune the sweet lyre, and grace my airy train,
 If, where ye rove, your searching eyes have known
 One perfect mind, which judgment calls its own;
 There every breast its fondest hopes must bend,
 And every Muse with tears await her friend."
 'Twas then fair Isis from her stream arose,
 In kind compassion of her sister's woes.
 'Twas then she promised to the mourning maid
 The immortal honours which thy hands have paid:
 "My best loved son," she said, "shall yet restore Thy ruin'd sweets, and Fancy weep no more."
 Each rising art by slow gradation moves;
 Toil builds, &c.

Or paint the curse that mark'd the Theban's* reign,
 A bed incestuous, and a father slain.
 With kind concern our pitying eyes o'erflow, 25
 Trace the sad tale, and own another's woe.

To Rome removed, with wit secure to please,
 The comic Sisters kept their native ease :
 With jealous fear, declining Greece beheld
 Her own Menander's art almost excell'd ; 30
 But every Muse essay'd to raise in vain
 Some labour'd rival of her tragic strain :
 Ilissus' laurels, though transferr'd with toil,
 Droop'd their fair leaves, nor knew the unfriendly soil.

As Arts expired, resistless Dulness rose ; 35
 ' Goths, Priests, or Vandals, — all were Learning's foes.

VARIATIONS.

- Ver. 25. Line after line our pitying eyes o'erflow,
 27. To Rome removed, with equal power to please,
 35. When Rome herself, her envied glories dead,
 No more imperial, stoop'd her conquer'd head ;
 Luxuriant Florence chose a softer theme,
 While all was peace, by Arno's silver stream.
 With sweeter notes the Etrurian vales complain'd,
 And arts reviving told a Cosmo reign'd.
 Their wanton lyres the bards of Provence strung,
 Sweet flow'd the lays, but love was all they sung.
 The gay, &c.

* The Cedipus of Sophocles.

Till Julius* first recall'd each exiled maid,
And Cosmo own'd them in the Etrurian shade:
Then, deeply skill'd in love's engaging theme,
The soft Provençal pass'd to Arno's stream: 40
With graceful ease the wanton lyre he strung;
Sweet flow'd the lays — but love was all he sung.
The gay description could not fail to move,
For, led by nature, all are friends to love.

But Heaven, still various in its works, decreed 45
The perfect boast of time should last succeed.
The beauteous union must appear at length,
Of Tuscan fancy, and Athenian strength:
One greater Muse Eliza's reign adorn,
And e'en a Shakespeare to her fame be born! 50

Yet ah! so bright her morning's opening ray,
In vain our Britain hoped an equal day!
No second growth the western isle could bear,
At once exhausted with too rich a year.
Too nicely Jonson knew the critic's part; 55
Nature in him was almost lost in art.
Of softer mould the gentle Fletcher came,
The next in order, as the next in name;
With pleased attention, 'midst his scenes we find
Each glowing thought that warms the female mind;

VARIATION.

Ver. 45. But Heaven, still rising in its works, decreed

* Julius the Second, the immediate predecessor of Leo the Tenth.

Each melting sigh, and every tender tear ; 61
 The lover's wishes, and the virgin's fear.

 Drawn by his pen, our ruder passions stand 65

With † gradual steps and slow, exacter France
 Saw Art's fair empire o'er her shores advance :
 By length of toil a bright perfection knew,
 Correctly bold, and just in all she drew : 70
 Till late Corneille, with Lucan's ‡ spirit fired,
 Breathed the free strain, as Rome and he inspired :
 And classic judgment gain'd to sweet Racine
 The temperate strength of Maro's chaster line.

But wilder far the British laurel spread, 75
 And wreaths less artful crown our poet's head.

VARIATIONS.

Ver. 63. His every strain the Loves and Graces own ;

71. Till late Corneille from epick Lucan brought
 The full expression, and the Roman thought :

* Their characters are thus distinguished by Mr. Dryden.

† About the time of Shakespeare, the poet Hardy was in great repute in France. He wrote, according to Fontenelle, six hundred plays. The French poets after him applied themselves in general to the correct improvement of the stage, which was almost totally disregarded by those of our own country, Jonson excepted.

Yet he alone to every scene could give
 The historian's truth, and bid the manners live.
 Waked at his call I view, with glad surprise,
 Majestic forms of mighty monarchs rise. 80
 There Henry's trumpets spread their loud alarms,
 And laurel'd Conquest waits her hero's arms.
 Here gentler Edward claims a pitying sigh,
 Scarce born to honours, and so soon to die !
 Yet shall thy throne, unhappy infant, bring 85
 No beam of comfort to the guilty king :
 The time* shall come when Glo'ster's heart shall bleed,
 In life's last hours, with horror of the deed ;
 When dreary visions shall at last present
 Thy vengeful image in the midnight tent : 90
 Thy hand unseen the secret death shall bear,
 Blunt the weak sword, and break the oppressive spear !

Where'er we turn, by Fancy charm'd, we find
 Some sweet illusion of the cheated mind.
 Oft, wild of wing, she calls the soul to rove 95
 With humbler nature, in the rural grove ;
 Where swains contented own the quiet scene,
 And twilight fairies tread the circled green :
 Dress'd by her hand, the woods and valleys smile,
 And Spring diffusive decks the enchanted isle. 100

O, more than all in powerful genius blest,
 Come, take thine empire o'er the willing breast!
 Whate'er the wounds this youthful heart shall feel,
 Thy songs support me, and thy morals heal!
 There every thought the poet's warmth may raise,
 There native music dwells in all the lays. 106
 O might some verse with happiest skill persuade Expressive Picture to adopt thine aid!
 What wondrous draughts might rise from every

 What other Raphaels charm a distant age! 110

Methinks e'en now I view some free design,
 Where breathing Nature lives in every line:

VARIATIONS.

- Ver. 101. O, blest in all that genius gives to charm,
 Whose morals mend us, and whose passions warm!
 Oft let my youth attend thy various page,
 Where rich invention rules the unbounded stage:
 There every scene the poet's warmth may raise,
 And melting music find the softest lays:
 O, might the Muse with equal ease persuade
 Expressive Picture to adopt thine aid!
 Some powerful Raphael should again appear,
 And arts consenting fix their empire here.
111. Methinks e'en now I view some fair design,
 Where breathing Nature lives in every line;
 Chaste and subdued, the modest colours lie,
 In fair proportion to the approving eye:
 And see where Anthony lamenting stands,
 In fixt distress, and spreads his pleading hands:
 O'er the pale corse the warrior seems to bend,

Chaste and subdued the modest lights decay,
 Steal into shades, and mildly melt away.
 And see where Anthony,* in tears approved, 115
 Guards the pale relics of the chief he loved :
 O'er the cold corse the warrior seems to bend,
 Deep sunk in grief, and mourns his murder'd friend !
 Still as they press, he calls on all around,
 Lifts the torn robe, and points the bleeding wound.

But who † is he, whose brows exalted bear 121
 A wrath impatient, and a fiercer air ?
 Awake to all that injured worth can feel,
 On his own Rome he turns the avenging steel ;
 Yet shall not war's insatiate fury fall 125
 (So heaven ordains it) on the destined wall.
 See the fond mother, 'midst the plaintive train,
 Hung on his knees, and prostrate on the plain !

VARIATION.

Ver. 122. A rage impatient, and a fiercer air ?
 E'en now his thoughts with eager vengeance doom
 The last sad ruin of ungrateful Rome.
 Till, slow advancing o'er the tented plain,
 In sable weeds, appear the kindred train :
 The frantic mother leads their wild despair,
 Beats her swoln breast, and rends her silver hair ;
 And see, he yields ! the tears unbidden start,
 And conscious nature claims the unwilling heart !
 O'er all the man conflicting passions rise ;

 unknown,
 E'en Homer's numbers charm'd by parts alone.
 Their own Ulysses scarce had wander'd more,
 By winds and waters cast on every shore:
 When, raised by fate, some former Hammer join'd
 Each beauteous image of the boundless mind; 146
 And bade, like thee, his Athens ever claim
 A fond alliance with the Poet's name.

VERSES

WRITTEN ON A PAPER WHICH CONTAINED A PIECE OF BRIDE-CAKE, GIVEN TO THE AUTHOR BY A LADY.

YE curious hands, that, hid from vulgar eyes,
By search profane shall find this hallow'd cake,
With virtue's awe forbear the sacred prize,
Nor dare a theft, for love and pity's sake !

This precious relic, form'd by magic power, 5
Beneath her shepherd's haunted pillow laid,
Was meant by love to charm the silent hour,
The secret present of a matchless maid.

The Cyprian queen, at Hymen's fond request, 9
Each nice ingredient chose with happiest art ;
Fears, sighs, and wishes of the enamour'd breast,
And pains that please, are mix'd in every part.

With rosy hand the spicy fruit she brought,
From Paphian hills, and fair Cythera's isle ; 14
And temper'd sweet with these the melting thought,
The kiss ambrosial, and the yielding smile.

Ambiguous looks, that scorn and yet relent,
Denials mild, and firm unalter'd truth;
Reluctant pride, and amorous faint consent,
And meeting ardours, and exulting youth. 20

Sleep, wayward God! hath sworn, while these remain,

With flattering dreams to dry his nightly tear,
And cheerful Hope, so oft invoked in vain,
With fairy songs shall soothe his pensive ear.

If, bound by vows to Friendship's gentle side, 25
And fond of soul, thou hop'st an equal grace,
If youth or maid thy joys and griefs divide,
O, much entreated, leave this fatal place!

Sweet Peace, who long hath shunn'd my plaintive day, 29

Consents at length to bring me short delight,
Thy careless steps may scare her doves away,
And Grief with raven note usurp the night.

CEASE, fair Aurelia, cease to mourn,
 Lament not Hannah's happy state;
 You may be happy in your turn,
 And seize the treasure you regret.

With Love united Hymen stands, 5
 And softly whispers to your charms,
 "Meet but your lover in my bands, You'll find your sister in his arms."

SONNET.

WHEN Phœbe form'd a wanton smile,
 My soul! it reach'd not here:
 Strange, that thy peace, thou trembler, flies
 Before a rising tear!
 From 'midst the drops, my love is born, 5
 That o'er those eyelids rove:
 Thus issued from a teeming wave
 The fabled queen of love.

SONG.

THE SENTIMENTS BORROWED FROM SHAKESPEARE.*

YOUNG Damon of the vale is dead,
 Ye lowly hamlets, moan ;
 A dewy turf lies o'er his head,
 And at his feet a stone.

His shroud, which Death's cold damps destroy, 5
 Of snow-white threads was made :
 All mourn'd to see so sweet a boy
 In earth for ever laid.

Pale pansies o'er his corpse were placed,
 Which, pluck'd before their time, 10
 Bestrew'd the boy, like him to waste
 And wither in their prime.

VARIATION.

Ver. 2. Ye lowland hamlets, moan ;

* It is uncertain where this poem appeared. It was inserted in the Edinburgh edition of the Poets, 1794. A manuscript copy in the collection recently belonging to Mr. Upcott, and now in the British Museum, is headed, "Written by Collins when at Winchester School. From a Manuscript."

But will he ne'er return, whose tongue
Could tune the rural lay ?

Ah, no ! his bell of peace is rung, 15
His lips are cold as clay.

They bore him out at twilight hour,
The youth who loved so well :
Ah, me ! how many a true love shower
Of kind remembrance fell ! 20

Each maid was woe — but Lucy chief,
Her grief o'er all was tried ;
Within his grave she dropp'd in grief,
And o'er her loved one died.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE ORIENTAL ECLOGUES AND ODES.

BY DR. LANGHORNE.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE ORIENTAL ECLOGUES.

THE genius of the pastoral, as well as of every other respectable species of poetry, had its origin in the east, and from thence was transplanted by the muses of Greece ; but whether from the continent of the Lesser Asia, or from Egypt, which, about the era of the Grecian pastoral, was the hospitable nurse of letters, it is not easy to determine. From the subjects, and the manner of Theocritus, one would incline to the latter opinion, while the history of Bion is in favour of the former.

However, though it should still remain a doubt through what channel the pastoral traveled westward, there is not the least shadow of uncertainty concerning its oriental origin.

In those ages which, guided by sacred chronology, from a comparative view of time, we call the early ages, it appears, from the most authentic historians, that the chiefs of the people employed themselves in rural exercises, and that astronomers and legislators were at the same time shepherds. Thus Strabo informs us, that the history of the creation was communicated to the Egyptians by a Chaldean shepherd.

From these circumstances it is evident, not only that such shepherds were capable of all the dignity and elegance peculiar to poetry, but that whatever poetry they attempted would be of the pastoral kind; would take its subjects from those scenes of rural simplicity in which they were conversant, and, as it was the offspring of harmony and nature, would employ the powers it derived from the former, to celebrate the beauty and benevolence of the latter.

Accordingly we find that the most ancient poems treat of agriculture, astronomy, and other objects within the rural and natural systems.

What constitutes the difference between the georgic and the pastoral, is love and the colloquial or dramatic form of composition peculiar to the latter; this form of composition is sometimes dispensed with, and love and rural imagery alone are thought sufficient to distinguish the pastoral. The tender passion, however, seems to be essential to this species of poetry, and is hardly ever excluded from those pieces that were intended to come under this denomination: even in those eclogues of the Amœbean kind, whose only purport is a trial of skill between contending shepherds, love has its usual share, and the praises of their respective mistresses are the general subjects of the competitors.

It is to be lamented, that scarce any oriental compositions of this kind have survived the ravages of ignorance, tyranny, and time; we cannot doubt that many such have been extant, possibly as far down as that fatal period, never to be mentioned in the world of letters without horror, when the glorious monuments of human ingenuity perished in the ashes of the Alexandrian library.

Those ingenious Greeks, whom we call the parents of pastoral poetry, were, probably, no more than imitators, of imitators that derived their harmony from higher and remoter sources, and kindled their poetical fires at those then unextinguished lamps which burned within the tombs of oriental genius.

It is evident that Homer has availed himself of those magnificent images and descriptions so frequently to be met with in the books of the Old Testament; and why may not Theocritus, Moschus, and Bion have found their archetypes in other eastern writers, whose names have perished with their works? yet, though it may not be illiberal to admit such a supposition, it would certainly be invidious to conclude, what the malignity of cavillers alone could suggest with regard to Homer, that they destroyed the sources from which they borrowed, and, as it is fabled of the young of the pelican, drained their supporters to death.

As the Septuagint translation of the Old Testament was performed at the request, and under the patronage, of Ptolemy Philadelphus, it were not to be wondered if Theocritus, who was entertained at that prince's court, had borrowed some part of his pastoral imagery from the poetical passages of those books. I think it can hardly be doubted that the Sicilian poet had in his eye certain expressions of the prophet Isaiah, when he wrote the following lines :

*Nûn ἴα μὲν φορέοιτε βάτοι, φορέοιτε δ' ἄκανθαι.
 'Α δὲ καλὰ Νάρκισσος ἐπ' ἀρκευθοῖσι κομάσαι·
 Πάντα δ' ἑναλλα γένοιτο, καὶ ἁ πίτυς ὄχνας ἐνείκει
 ——— καὶ τὼς κύνας ὠλάφος ἔλκοι.*

Let vexing brambles the blue violet bear,
 On the rude thorn Narcissus dress his hair,
 All, all reversed — The pine with pears be crown'd,
 And the bold deer shall drag the trembling hound.

The cause, indeed, of these phenomena is very different in the Greek from what it is in the Hebrew poet; the former employing them on the death, the latter on the birth, of an important person: but the marks of imitation are nevertheless obvious.

It might, however, be expected, that if Theocritus had borrowed at all from the sacred writers, the celebrated pastoral epithalamium of Solomon.

so much within his own walk of poetry, would not certainly have escaped his notice. His epithalamium on the marriage of Helena, moreover, gave him an open field for imitation; therefore, if he has any obligations to the royal bard, we may expect to find them there. The very opening of the poem is in the spirit of the Hebrew song:

Οὕτω δὴ πρῶϊζα κατέδραθες, ὦ φίλε γαμβρέ;

The colour of imitation is still stronger in the following passage:

Ἄως ἀντέλλοισα καλὸν διέφαινε πρόσωπον,
Πότνια νύξ ἄτε, λευκὸν ἔαρ χειμῶνος ἀνέντος.
Ὡδε καὶ ἡ χρυσέα Ἑλένα διεφαίνεται ἐν ἀμύν,
Πιείρα μεγάλη ἄτ' ἀνέδραμε κόσμος ἀρούρα.
*Ἡ κάπῳ κυπάρισσος, ἣ ἄρματι Θεσσαλὸς ἵππος.

This description of Helen is infinitely above the style and figure of the Sicilian pastoral: "She is like the rising of the golden morning, when the night departeth, and when the winter is over and gone. She resembleth the cypress in the garden, the horse in the chariots of Thessaly." These figures plainly declare their origin; and others, equally imitative, might be pointed out in the same idyllium.

This beautiful and luxuriant marriage pastoral of Solomon is the only perfect form of the oriental eclogue that has survived the ruins of time; a happiness for which it is, probably, more indebted to its sacred character than to its intrinsic merit. Not that it is by any means destitute of poetical excellence : like all the eastern poetry, it is bold, wild, and unconnected in its figures, allusions, and parts, and has all that graceful and magnificent daring which characterizes its metaphorical and comparative imagery.

In consequence of these peculiarities, so ill adapted to the frigid genius of the north, Mr. Collins could make but little use of it as a precedent for his Oriental Eclogues ; and even in his third eclogue, where the subject is of a similar nature, he has chosen rather to follow the mode of the Doric and the Latian pastoral.

The scenery and subjects then of the foregoing eclogues alone are oriental ; the style and colouring are purely European ; and, for this reason, the author's preface, in which he intimates that he had the originals from a merchant who traded to the east, is omitted, as being now altogether superfluous.*

With regard to the merit of these eclogues, it may justly be asserted, that in simplicity of description and expression, in delicacy and softness of numbers, and in natural and unaffected tenderness, they are not to be equaled by any thing of the pastoral kind in the English language.

* In the present edition the preface is restored.

ECLOGUE I.

THIS eclogue, which is entitled Selim, or the Shepherd's Moral, as there is nothing dramatic in the subject, may be thought the least entertaining of the four: but it is by no means the least valuable. The moral precepts which the intelligent shepherd delivers to his fellow-swains, and the virgins their companions, are such as would infallibly promote the happiness of the pastoral life.

In impersonating the private virtues, the poet has observed great propriety, and has formed their genealogy with the most perfect judgment, when he represents them as the daughters of truth and wisdom.

The characteristics of modesty and chastity are extremely happy and peinturesque:

"Come thou, whose thoughts as limpid springs are clear
To lead the train, sweet Modesty, appear;
With thee be Chastity, of all afraid,
Distrusting all, a wise, suspicious maid;
Cold is her breast, like flowers that drink the dew;
A silken veil conceals her from the view."

The two similes borrowed from rural objects are not only much in character, but perfectly natural and expressive. There is, notwithstanding, this defect in the former, that it wants a peculiar propriety; for purity of thought may as well be applied to chastity as to modesty; and from this instance, as well as from a thousand more, we may see the necessity of distinguishing, in characteristic poetry, every object by marks and attributes peculiarly its own.

It cannot be objected to this eclogue, that it wants both those essential criteria of the pastoral, love and the drama; for though it partakes not of the latter, the former still retains an interest in it, and that too very material, as it professedly consults the virtue and happiness of the lover, while it informs what are the qualities — that must lead to love.

ECLOGUE II.

ALL the advantages that any species of poetry can derive from the novelty of the subject and scenery, this eclogue possesses. The route of a camel-driver is a scene that scarce could exist in the imagination of a European, and of its attendant distresses he could have no idea.—These are very happily and minutely painted by our descriptive poet. What sublime simplicity of expression! what nervous plainness in the opening of the poem!

“In silent horror o’er the boundless waste
The driver Hassan with his camels past.”

The magic pencil of the poet brings the whole scene before us at once, as it were by enchantment; and in this single couplet we feel all the effect that arises from the terrible wildness of a region unenlivened by the habitations of men. The verses that describe so minutely the camel-driver’s little provisions have a touching influence on the imagination, and prepare the reader to enter more feelingly into his future apprehensions of distress :

“Bethink thee, Hassan, where shall thirst assuage,
When fails this cruise, his unrelenting rage !”

It is difficult to say whether his apostrophe to the “mute companions of his toils” is more to be admired for the elegance and beauty of the poetical imagery, or for the tenderness and humanity of the sentiment. He who can read it without being affected, will do his heart no injustice if he concludes it to be destitute of sensibility :

“Ye mute companions of my toils, that bear
In all my griefs a more than equal share !
Here, where no springs in murmurs break away,
Or moss-crown'd fountains mitigate the day,
In vain ye hope the green delights to know,
Which plains more blest, or verdant vales, bestow :
Here rocks alone and tasteless sands are found,
And faint and sickly winds for ever howl around.”

Yet in these beautiful lines there is a slight error, which writers of the greatest genius very frequently fall into. — It will be needless to observe to the accurate reader, that in the fifth and sixth verses there is a verbal pleonasm where the poet speaks of the green delights of verdant vales. There is an oversight of the same kind in the Manners, an Ode, where the poet says,

“—— Seine's blue nymphs deplore
In watchet weeds ——.”

This fault is indeed a common one, but to a reader of taste it is nevertheless disgusting; and it is mentioned here, as the error of a man of genius and judgment, that men of genius and judgment may guard against it.

Mr. Collins speaks like a true poet, as well in sentiment as expression, when, with regard to the thirst of wealth, he says,

“ Why heed we not, while mad we haste along,
The gentle voice of Peace, or Pleasure’s song?
Or wherefore think the flowery mountain’s side,
The fountain’s murmurs, and the valley’s pride,
Why think we these less pleasing to behold,
Than dreary deserts, if they lead to gold? ”

But however just these sentiments may appear to those who have not revolted from nature and simplicity, had the author proclaimed them in Lombard Street, or Cheapside, he would not have been complimented with the understanding of the bellman. — A striking proof, that our own particular ideas of happiness regulate our opinions concerning the sense and wisdom of others!

It is impossible to take leave of this most beautiful eclogue, without paying the tribute of admiration so justly due to the following nervous lines :

“ What if the lion in his rage I meet! —
Oft in the dust I view his printed feet:
And, fearful! oft, when day’s declining light
Yields her pale empire to the mourner night,

By hunger roused, he scours the groaning plain,
Gaunt wolves and sullen tigers in his train:
Before them death with shrieks directs their way,
Fills the wild yell, and leads them to their prey."

This, amongst many other passages to be met with in the writings of Collins, shows that his genius was perfectly capable of the grand and magnificent in description, notwithstanding what a learned writer has advanced to the contrary. Nothing, certainly, could be more greatly conceived, or more adequately expressed, than the image in the last couplet.

The deception, sometimes 'used in rhetoric and poetry, which presents us with an object or sentiment contrary to what we expected, is here introduced to the greatest advantage :

" Farewell the youth, whom sighs could not detain,
Whom Zara's breaking heart implored in vain!
Yet, as thou go'st, may every blast arise —
Weak and unfelt as these rejected sighs! "

But this, perhaps, is rather an artificial prettiness, than a real or natural beauty.

ECLOGUE III.

THAT innocence, and native simplicity of manners, which, in the first eclogue, was allowed to constitute the happiness of love, is here beautifully described in its effects. The sultan of Persia marries a Georgian shepherdess, and finds in her embraces that genuine felicity which unperverted nature alone can bestow. The most natural and beautiful parts of this eclogue are those where the fair sultana refers with so much pleasure to her pastoral amusements, and those scenes of happy innocence in which she had passed her early years; particularly when, upon her first departure,

“Oft as she went, she backward turned her view,
And bade that crook and bleating flock adieu.”

This picture of amiable simplicity reminds one of that passage where Proserpine, when carried off by Pluto, regrets the loss of the flowers she has been gathering :

“Collecti flores tunicis cecidere remissis :
Tantaque simplicitas puerilibus adfuit annis,
Hæc quoque virgineum movit jactura dolorem.”

ECLOGUE IV.

THE beautiful but unfortunate country where the scene of this pathetic eclogue is laid, had been recently torn in pieces by the depredations of its savage neighbours, when Mr. Collins so affectingly described its misfortunes. This ingenious man had not only a pencil to portray, but a heart to feel for the miseries of mankind; and it is with the utmost tenderness and humanity he enters into the narrative of Circassia's ruin, while he realizes the scene, and brings the present drama before us. Of every circumstance that could possibly contribute to the tender effect this pastoral was designed to produce, the poet has availed himself with the utmost art and address. Thus he prepares the heart to pity the distresses of Circassia, by representing it as the scene of the happiest love :

“ In fair Circassia, where, to love inclined,
Each swain was blest, for every maid was kind.”

To give the circumstance of the dialogue a more affecting solemnity, he makes the time midnight, and describes the two shepherds in the very act of flight from the destruction that swept over their country :

“ Sad o’er the dews, two brother shepherds fled,
Where wildering fear and desperate sorrow led.”

There is a beauty and propriety in the epithet wildering, which strikes us more forcibly, the more we consider it.

The opening of the dialogue is equally happy, natural, and unaffected ; when one of the shepherds, weary and overcome with the fatigue of flight, calls upon his companion to review the length of way they had passed. This is certainly painting from nature, and the thoughts, however obvious, or destitute of refinement, are perfectly in character. But as the closest pursuit of nature is the surest way to excellence in general, and to sublimity in particular, in poetical description, so we find that this simple suggestion of the shepherd is not unattended with magnificence. There is a grandeur and variety in the landscape he describes :

“ And first review that long extended plain,
And yon wide groves, already past with pain!
Yon ragged cliff, whose dangerous path we tried!
And, last, this lofty mountain’s weary side! ”

There is, in imitative harmony, an act of expressing a slow and difficult movement by adding to the usual number of pauses in a verse. This is observable in the line that describes the ascent of the mountain :

And last || this lofty mountain's || weary side ||.

Here we find the number of pauses, or musical bars, which, in an heroic verse, is commonly two, increased to three.

The liquid melody, and the numerous sweetness of expression, in the following descriptive lines, is almost inimitably beautiful :

“ Sweet to the sight is Zabran's flowery plain,
And once by nymphs and shepherds loved in vain !
No more the virgins shall delight to rove
By Sargis' banks, or Irwan's shady grove ;
On Tarkie's mountain catch the cooling gale,
Or breathe the sweets of Aly's flowery vale.”

Nevertheless, in this delightful landscape there is an obvious fault ; there is no distinction between the plain of Zabran and the vale of Aly ; they are both flowery, and consequently undiversified. This could not proceed from the poet's want of judgment, but from inattention : it had not occurred to him that he had employed the epithet flowery twice within so short a compass ; an oversight which those who are accustomed to poetical, or, indeed, to any other species of composition, know to be very possible.

Nothing can be more beautifully conceived, or more pathetically expressed, than the shepherd's apprehensions for his fair countrywomen, exposed to the ravages of the invaders :

“ In vain Circassia boasts her spicy groves,
For ever famed for pure and happy loves :
In vain she boasts her fairest of the fair,
Their eyes’ blue languish, and their golden hair !
Those eyes in tears their fruitless grief shall send ;
Those hairs the Tartar’s cruel hand shall rend.”

There is certainly some very powerful charm in the liquid melody of sounds. The editor of these poems could never read or hear the following verse repeated, without a degree of pleasure otherwise entirely unaccountable :

“ Their eyes’ blue languish, and their golden hair.”

Such are the Oriental Eclogues, which we leave with the same kind of anxious pleasure we feel upon a temporary parting with a beloved friend.

OBSERVATIONS ON THE ODES, DESCRIPTIVE AND ALLEGORICAL.

THE genius of Collins was capable of every degree of excellence in lyric poetry, and perfectly qualified for that high province of the muse. Possessed of a native ear for all the varieties of harmony and modulation, susceptible of the finest feelings of tenderness and humanity, but, above all, carried away by that high enthusiasm which gives to imagination its strongest colouring, he was at once capable of soothing the ear with the melody of his numbers, of influencing the passions by the force of his pathos, and of gratifying the fancy by the luxury of description.

In consequence of these powers, but, more particularly, in consideration of the last, he chose such subjects for his lyric essays as were most favourable for the indulgence of description and allegory; where he could exercise his powers in moral and personal painting; where he could exert his invention in conferring new attributes on images or objects already known, and described by a determinate number of characteristics; where he might give an uncommon éclat to his figures, by placing them in happier attitudes, or in more advantageous lights, and introduce new forms from the moral and intellectual world into the society of impersonated beings.

Such, no doubt, were the privileges which the poet expected, and such were the advantages he derived from the descriptive and allegorical nature of his themes.

It seems to have been the whole industry of our author, (and it is, at the same time, almost all the claim to moral excellence his writings can boast,) to promote the influence of the social virtues, by painting them in the fairest and happiest lights.

“Melior fieri tuendo”

would be no improper motto to his poems in general; but of his lyric poems it seems to be the whole moral tendency and effect. If, therefore, it should appear to some readers, that he has been more industrious to cultivate description than sentiment, it may be observed, that his descriptions themselves are sentimental, and answer the whole end of that species of writing, by embellishing every feature of virtue, and by conveying, through the effects of the pencil, the finest moral lessons to the mind.

Horace speaks of the fidelity of the ear in preference to the uncertainty of the eye; but if the mind receives conviction, it is certainly of very little importance through what medium, or by which of the senses it is conveyed. The impressions left on the imagination may possibly be thought less durable than the deposits of the memory, but it may very well admit of a question, whether a conclusion of reason, or an impression of imagination, will soonest make it sway to the heart. A moral precept, conveyed in words, is only an account of truth in its effects; a moral picture is truth exemplified; and which is most likely to gain upon the affections, it may not be difficult to determine.

This, however, must be allowed, that those works approach the nearest to perfection which unite these powers and advantages; which at once influence the imagination, and engage the memory; the former by the force of animated and striking description, the latter by a brief, but harmonious conveyance of precept: thus, while the heart is influenced through the operation of the passions or the fancy, the effect, which might otherwise have been transient, is secured by the coöperating power of the memory, which treasures up in a short aphorism the moral of the scene.

This is a good reason, and this, perhaps, is the only reason that can be given, why our dramatic performances should generally end with a chain of couplets. In these the moral of the whole piece is usually conveyed; and that assistance which the memory borrows from rhyme, as it was probably the original cause of it, gives it usefulness and propriety even there.

After these apologies for the descriptive turn of the following odes, something remains to be said on the origin and use of allegory in poetical composition.

By this we are not to understand the trope in the schools, which is defined aliud verbis, aliud sensu ostendere; and of which Quintilian says, usus est, ut tristia dicamus melioribus verbis, aut bonæ rei gratia quædam contrariis significemus, &c. It is not the verbal, but the sentimental allegory, not allegorical expression (which, indeed, might come under the term of metaphor), but allegorical imagery, that is here in question.

When we endeavour to trace this species of figurative sentiment to its origin, we find it coeval with literature itself. It is generally agreed, that the most ancient productions are poetical; and it is certain that the most ancient poems abound with allegorical imagery.

If, then, it be allowed that the first literary productions were poetical; we shall have little or no difficulty in discovering the origin of allegory.

At the birth of letters, in the transition from hieroglyphical to literal expression, it is not to be wondered if the custom of expressing ideas by personal images, which had so long prevailed, should still retain its influence on the mind, though the use of letters had rendered the practical application of it superfluous. Those who had been accustomed to express strength by the image of an elephant, swiftness by that of a panther, and courage by that of a lion, would make no scruple of substituting, in letters, the symbols for the ideas they had been used to represent.

Here we plainly see the origin of allegorical expression, that it arose from the ashes of hieroglyphics; and if to the same cause we should refer that figurative boldness of style and imagery which distinguish the oriental writings, we shall, perhaps, conclude more justly, than if we should impute it to the superior grandeur of eastern genius.

From the same source with the verbal, we are to derive the sentimental allegory, which is nothing more than a continuation of the metaphorical or symbolical expression of the several agents in an action, or the different objects in a scene.

The latter most peculiarly comes under the denomination of allegorical imagery; and in this species of allegory, we include the impersonation of passions, affections, virtues, and vices, &c. on account of which, principally, the following odes were properly termed, by their author, allegorical.

With respect to the utility of this figurative writing, the same arguments that have been advanced in favour of descriptive poetry will be of weight likewise here. It is, indeed, from impersonation, or, as it is commonly termed, personification, that poetical description borrows its chief powers and graces. Without the aid of this, moral and intellectual painting would be flat and unanimated, and even the scenery of material objects would be dull, without the introduction of fictitious life.

These observations will be most effectually illustrated by the sublime and beautiful odes that occasioned them; in those it will appear how happily this allegorical painting may be executed by the genuine powers of poetical genius, and they will not fail to prove its force and utility by passing through the imagination to the heart.

ODE TO PITY.

" By Pella's bard, a magic name,
 By all the griefs his thoughts could frame,
 Receive my humble rite :
 Long, Pity, let the nations view
 Thy sky-worn robes of tenderest blue,
 And eyes of dewy light ! "

The propriety of invoking Pity, through the mediation of Euripides, is obvious.—That admirable poet had the keys of all the tender passions, and therefore could not but stand in the highest esteem with a writer of Mr. Collins's sensibility.—He did, indeed, admire him as much as Milton professedly did, and probably for the same reasons; but we do not find that he has copied him so closely as the last mentioned poet has sometimes done, and particularly in the opening of Samson Agonistes, which is an evident imitation of the following passage in the Phœnissæ :

'Ηγοῦ πάροιθε, θύγατερ, ὥς τυφλῶ ποδὶ
 'Οφθαλμὸς εἶ σὺν, ναυτίλοισιν ἄστρον ὥς·
 Δεῦρ' εἰς τὸ λευρὸν πέδον ἵχνος τιθεῖσ' ἐμὸν,
 Πρόβαινε ————— Act. III. Sc. I.

The "eyes of dewy light" is one of the happiest strokes of imagination, and may be ranked among those expressions which “ — give us back the image of the mind.”

“ Wild Arun too has heard thy strains,
And Echo, 'midst my native plains,
Been soothed by Pity's lute.”

“ There first the wren thy myrtles shed
On gentlest Otway's infant head.”

Sussex, in which county the Arun is a small river, had the honour of giving birth to Otway as well as to Collins : both these poets, unhappily, became the objects of that pity by which their writings are distinguished. There was a similitude in their genius and in their sufferings. There was a resemblance in the misfortunes and in the dissipation of their lives ; and the circumstances of their death cannot be remembered without pain.

The thought of painting in the temple of Pity the history of human misfortunes, and of drawing the scenes from the tragic muse, is very happy, and in every respect worthy the imagination of Collins.

ODE TO FEAR.

MR. COLLINS, who had often determined to apply himself to dramatic poetry, seems here, with the same view, to have addressed one of the principal powers of the drama, and to implore that mighty influence she had given to the genius of Shakespeare:

“ Hither again thy fury deal,
Teach me but once like him to feel:
His cypress wreath my meed decree,
And I, O Fear, will dwell with thee ! ”

In the construction of this nervous ode, the author has shown equal power of judgment and imagination. Nothing can be more striking than the violent and abrupt abbreviation of the measure in the fifth and sixth verses, when he feels the strong influence of the power he invokes :

“ Ah Fear! ah frantic Fear!
I see, I see thee near.”

The editor of these poems has met with nothing in the same species of poetry, either in his own, or in any other language, equal, in all respects, to the following description of Danger :

“ Danger whose limbs of giant mould
 What mortal eye can fix’d behold?
 Who stalks his round, an hideous form,
 Howling amidst the midnight storm,
 Or throws him on the ridgy steep
 Of some loose hanging rock to sleep.”

It is impossible to contemplate the image conveyed in the two last verses, without those emotions of terror it was intended to excite. It has, moreover, the entire advantage of novelty to recommend it; for there is too much originality in all the circumstances, to suppose that the author had in his eye that description of the penal situation of Catiline in the ninth Æneid:

“ ——— Te, Catilina, minaci
 Pendentem scopulo.”

The archetype of the English poet’s idea was in Nature, and, probably, to her alone he was indebted for the thought. From her, likewise, he derived that magnificence of conception, that horrible grandeur of imagery, displayed in the following lines:

“ And those, the fiends, who, near allied,
 O’er Nature’s wounds and wrecks preside;
 While Vengeance in the lurid air
 Lifts her red arm, exposed and bare:
 On whom that ravening brood of fate,
 Who lap the blood of sorrow, wait.”

That nutritive enthusiasm, which cherishes the seeds of poetry, and which is, indeed, the only soil wherein they will grow to perfection, lays open the mind to all the influences of fiction. A passion for whatever is greatly wild or magnificent in the works of nature seduces the imagination to attend to all that is extravagant, however unnatural. Milton was notoriously fond of high romance and gothic diableries; and Collins, who in genius and enthusiasm bore no very distant resemblance to Milton, was wholly carried away by the same attachments.

“ Be mine to read the visions old,
Which thy awakening bards have told:
And, lest thou meet my blasted view,
Hold each strange tale devoutly true.”

“ On that thrice hallow’d eve,” &c.

There is an old traditionary superstition, that on St. Mark’s eve, the forms of all such persons as shall die within the ensuing year make their solemn entry into the churches of their respective parishes, as St. Patrick swam over the Channel, without their heads.

ODE TO SIMPLICITY

THE measure of the ancient ballad seems to have been made choice of for this ode, on account of the subject; and it has, indeed, an air of simplicity, not altogether unaffecting:

“By all the honey'd store
On Hybla's thymy shore,
By all her blooms, and mingled murmurs dear,
By her whose love-lorn woe,
In evening musings slow,
Sooth'd sweetly sad Electra's poet's ear.”

This allegorical imagery of the honeyed store, the blooms, and mingled murmurs of Hybla, alluding to the sweetness and beauty of the Attic poetry, has the finest and the happiest effect: yet, possibly, it will bear a question, whether the ancient Greek tragedians had a general claim to simplicity in any thing more than the plans of their drama. Their language, at least, was infinitely metaphorical; yet it must be owned that they justly copied nature and the passions, and so far, certainly, they were entitled to the palm of true simplicity; the following most beautiful speech of Polynices will be a monument of this, so long as poetry shall last :

————— πολὺδακρυς δ' ἀφικόμην
 Χρόνιος ἰδὼν μέλαθρα, καὶ βωμοὺς θεῶν,
 Γυμνάσιά θ' οἷσιν ἐνετράφην, Δίρκης, θ' ὕδωρ,
 ὧν οὐ δικαίως ἀπελαθεῖς, ξένην πόλιν
 Naίω, δι' ὅσων νᾶμ' ἔχων δακρυῤῥοοῦν.
 Ἄλλ' ἐκ γὰρ ἄλγους ἄλγος αὖ, σέ δέρκομαι
 Κάρα ξυρηκές, καὶ πέπλους μελαγχίμους ἔχουσαν. Eurip. Phœniss. ver. 369.

22 " But staid to sing alone
 33 To one distinguish'd throne."

The poet cuts off the prevalence of simplicity among the Romans with the reign of Augustus ; and, indeed, it did not continue much longer, most of the compositions, after that date, giving into false and artificial ornament.

" No more, in hall or bower,
 The passions own thy power,
 Love, only love, her forceless numbers mean."

In these lines the writings of the Provençal poets are principally alluded to, in which simplicity is generally sacrificed to the rhapsodies of romantic love.

ODE ON THE POETICAL CHARACTER.

Procul ! O ! procul este profani !

THIS ode is so infinitely abstracted and replete with high enthusiasm, that it will find few readers capable of entering into the spirit of it, or of relishing its beauties. There is a style of sentiment as utterly unintelligible to common capacities, as if the subject were treated in an unknown language; and it is on the same account that abstracted poetry will never have many admirers.

The authors of such poems must be content with the approbation of those heaven-favoured geniuses, who, by a similarity of taste and sentiment, are enabled to penetrate the high mysteries of inspired fancy, and to pursue the loftiest flights of enthusiastic imagination. Nevertheless, the praise of the distinguished few is certainly preferable to the applause of the undiscerning million; for all praise is valuable in proportion to the judgment of those who confer it.

As the subject of this ode is uncommon, so are the style and expression highly metaphorical and abstracted: thus the sun is called "the rich-hair'd youth of morn," the ideas are termed "the shadowy tribes of mind," &c. We are struck with the propriety of this mode of expression here, and it affords us new proofs of the analogy that subsists between language and sentiment.

Nothing can be more loftily imagined than the creation of the cestus of Fancy in this ode: the allegorical imagery is rich and sublime: and the observation, that the dangerous passions kept aloof during the operation, is founded on the strictest philosophical truth: for poetical fancy can exist only in minds that are perfectly serene, and in some measure abstracted from the influences of sense.

The scene of Milton's "inspiring hour" is perfectly in character, and described with all those wild-wood appearances of which the great poet was so enthusiastically fond:

"I view that oak, the fancied glades among,
By which as Milton lay, his evening ear,
Nigh spher'd in heaven. its native strains could hear."

ODE,

WRITTEN IN THE YEAR 1746.

ODE TO MERCY.

THE Ode written in 1746, and the Ode to Mercy, seem to have been written on the same occasion, viz. the late rebellion; the former in memory of those heroes who fell in defence of their country, the latter to excite sentiments of compassion in favour of those unhappy and deluded wretches who became a sacrifice to public justice.

The language and imagery of both are very beautiful; but the scene and figures described, in the strophe of the Ode to Mercy, are exquisitely striking, and would afford a painter one of the finest subjects in the world.

ODE TO LIBERTY.

THE ancient states of Greece, perhaps the only ones in which a perfect model of liberty ever existed, are naturally brought to view in the opening of the poem :

“ Who shall awake the Spartan fire,
And call in solemn sounds to life,
The youths, whose locks divinely spreading,
Like vernal hyacinths in sullen hue. ”

There is something extremely bold in this imagery of the locks of the Spartan youths, and greatly superior to that description Jocasta gives us of the hair of Polynices :

Βοστρύχων τε κυανόχρωτα χαίτας
Πλόκαμον ———

“ What new Alcæus, fancy-blest,
Shall sing the sword, in myrtles drest,” &c.

This alludes to a fragment of Alcæus still remaining, in which the poet celebrates Harmodius and Aristogiton, who slew the tyrant Hipparchus, and thereby restored the liberty of Athens.

The fall of Rome is here most nervously described in one line

“ With heaviest sound, a giant statue, fell.”

The thought seems altogether new, and the imitative harmony in the structure of the verse is admirable.

After bewailing the ruin of ancient liberty, the poet considers the influence it has retained, or still retains, among the moderns; and here the free republics of Italy naturally engage his attention. — Florence, indeed, only to be lamented on account of losing its liberty under those patrons of letters, the Medicean family; the jealous Pisa, justly so called, in respect to its long impatience and regret under the same yoke; and the small Marino, which, however unrespectable with regard to power or extent of territory, has, at least, this distinction to boast, that it has preserved its liberty longer than any other state, ancient or modern, having, without any revolution, retained its present mode of government near fourteen hundred years. Moreover the patron saint who founded it, and from whom it takes its name, deserves this poetical record, as he is, perhaps, the only saint that ever contributed to the establishment of freedom.

“Nor e’er her former pride relate
To sad Liguria’s bleeding state.”

In these lines the poet alludes to those ravages in the state of Genoa, occasioned by the unhappy divisions of the Guelphs and Gibelins.

“—— When the favour’d of thy choice,
The daring archer heard thy voice.”

For an account of the celebrated event referred to in these verses, see Voltaire's Epistle to the King of Prussia.

“Those whom the rod of Alva bruised,
Whose crown a British queen refused !”

The Flemings were so dreadfully oppressed by this sanguinary general of Philip the Second, that they offered their sovereignty to Elizabeth; but, happily for her subjects, she had policy and magnanimity enough to refuse it. Desormeaux, in his Abrégé Chronologique de l'Histoire d'Espagne, thus describes the sufferings of the Flemings: “Le duc d'Albe achevoit de réduire les Flamands au désespoir. Après avoir inondé les échafauds du sang le plus noble et le plus précieux, il faisoit construire des citadelles en divers endroits, et vouloit établir l'Alcavala, ce tribute onéreux qui avoit été longtems en usage parmi les Espagnols.” — Abrég. Chron. tom. iv.

“ ——— Mona,
Where thousand elfin shapes abide.”

Mona is properly the Roman name of the Isle of Anglesey, anciently so famous for its Druids; but sometimes, as in this place, it is given to the Isle of Man. Both these isles still retain much of the genius of superstition, and are now the only places where there is the least chance of finding a fairy.

ODE TO A LADY,

ON THE DEATH OF COLONEL ROSS, IN THE ACTION OF FONTENOY.

THE iambic kind of numbers in which this ode is conceived seems as well calculated for tender and plaintive subjects, as for those where strength or rapidity is required. — This, perhaps, is owing to the repetition of the strain in the same stanza; for sorrow rejects variety, and affects a uniformity of complaint. It is needless to observe, that this ode is replete with harmony, spirit, and pathos; and there surely appears no reason why the seventh and eighth stanzas should be omitted in that copy printed in Dodsley's Collection of Poems.

ODE TO EVENING.

THE blank ode has for some time solicited admission into the English poetry ; but its efforts, hitherto, seem to have been in vain, at least its reception has been no more than partial. It remains a question, then, whether there is not something in the nature of blank verse less adapted to the lyric than to the heroic measure, since, though it has been generally received in the latter, it is yet unadopted in the former. In order to discover this, we are to consider the different modes of these different species of poetry. That of the heroic is uniform ; that of the lyric is various ; and in these circumstances of uniformity and variety probably lies the cause why blank verse has been successful in the one, and unacceptable in the other. While it presented itself only in one form, it was familiarized to the ear by custom ; but where it was obliged to assume the different shapes of the lyric muse, it seemed still a stranger of uncouth figure, was received rather with curiosity than pleasure, and entertained without that ease or satisfaction which acquaintance and familiarity produce. — Moreover, the heroic blank verse obtained a sanction of infinite importance to its general reception, when it was adopted by one of the greatest poets the world ever produced, and was made the vehicle of the noblest poem that ever was written. [When this poem at length extorted that applause which ignorance and prejudice had united to withhold, the versification soon found its imitators, and became more generally successful than even in those countries from whence it was imported. But lyric blank verse had met with no such advantages; for Mr. Collins, whose genius and judgment in harmony might have given it so powerful an effect, has left us but one specimen of it in the Ode to Evening.

In the choice of his measure he seems to have had in his eye Horace's Ode to Pyrrha; for this ode bears the nearest resemblance to that mixed kind of the asclepiad and pherecratic verse; and that resemblance in some degree reconciles us to the want of rhyme, while it reminds us of those great masters of antiquity, whose works had no need of this whimsical jingle of sounds.

From the following passage one might be induced to think that the poet had it in view to render his subject and his versification suitable to each other on this occasion, and that, when he addressed himself to the sober power of Evening, he had thought proper to lay aside the foppery of rhyme :

“ Now teach me, maid composed,
To breathe some soften'd strain,
Whose numbers, stealing through thy darkening vale,
May not unseemly with its stillness suit,
As, musing slow, I hail
Thy genial loved return! ”

But whatever were the numbers or the versification of this ode, the imagery and enthusiasm it contains could not fail of rendering it delightful. — No other of Mr. Collins's odes is more generally characteristic of his genius. In one place we discover his passion for visionary beings :

“ For when thy folding-star arising shows
His paly circlet, at his warning lamp
The fragrant Hours, and Elves
Who slept in buds the day,

And many a Nymph who wreathes her brows with sedge,
And sheds the freshening dew, and, lovelier still,
The pensive Pleasures sweet,
Prepare thy shadowy car.”

In another we behold his strong bias to melancholy :

“ Then let me rove some wild and heathy scene,
Or find some ruin 'midst its dreary dells,
Whose walls more awful nod
By thy religious gleams.”

Then appears his taste for what is wildly grand and magnificent in nature; when, prevented by storms from enjoying his evening walk, he wishes for a situation,

“ That from the mountain’s side
Views wilds and swelling floods; ”

And through the whole, his invariable attachment to the expression of painting :

“ — and marks o’er all
Thy dewy fingers draw
The gradual dusky veil.”

It might be a sufficient encomium on this beautiful ode to observe, that it has been particularly admired by a lady to whom nature has given the most perfect principles of taste. She has not even complained of the want of rhyme in it; a circumstance by no means unfavourable to the cause of lyric blank verse; for surely, if a fair reader can endure an ode without bells and chimes, the masculine genius may dispense with them.

THE MANNERS.

AN ODE.

FROM the subject and sentiments of this ode, it seems not improbable that the author wrote it about the time when he left the university; when, weary with the pursuit of academical studies, he no longer confined himself to the search of theoretical knowledge, but commenced the scholar of humanity, to study nature in her works, and man in society.

The following farewell to Science exhibits a very just as well as striking picture: for however exalted in theory the Platonic doctrines may appear, it is certain that Platonism and Pyrrhonism are nearly allied:

“ Farewell the porch, whose roof is seen,
Arch'd with the enlivening olive's green:
Where Science, prank'd in tissued vest,
By Reason, Pride, and Fancy drest,
Comes like a bride, so trim array'd,
To wed with Doubt in Plato's shade! ”

When the mind goes in pursuit of visionary systems, it is not far from the regions of doubt; and the greater its capacity to think abstractedly, to reason and refine, the more it will be exposed to, and bewildered in, uncertainty.—From an enthusiastic warmth of temper, indeed, we may for a while be encouraged to persist in some favourite doctrine, or to adhere to some adopted system; but when that enthusiasm, which is founded on the vivacity of the passions, gradually cools and dies away with them, the opinions it supported drop from us, and we are thrown upon the inhospitable shore of doubt.—A striking proof of the necessity of some moral rule of wisdom and virtue, and some system of happiness established by unerring knowledge, and unlimited power.

In the poet's address to Humour in this ode there is one image of singular beauty and propriety. The ornaments in the hair of Wit are of such a nature, and disposed in such a manner, as to be perfectly symbolical and characteristic :

“Me too amidst thy band admit,
There where the young-eyed healthful Wit,
(Whose jewels in his crisped hair
Are placed each other's beams to share,
Whom no delights from thee divide)
In laughter loosed, attends thy side.”

Nothing could be more expressive of wit, which consists in a happy collision of comparative and relative images, than this reciprocal reflection of light from the disposition of the jewels.

“ O Humour, thou whose name is known
To Britain’s favour’d isle alone.”

The author could only mean to apply this to the time when he wrote, since other nations had produced works of great humour, as he himself acknowledges afterwards.

“ By old Miletus,” &c.

“ By all you taught the Tuscan maids,” &c.

The Milesian and Tuscan romances were by no means distinguished for humour; but as they were the models of that species of writing in which humour was afterwards employed, they are, probably for that reason only, mentioned here.

THE PASSIONS.

AN ODE FOR MUSIC.

IF the music which was composed for this ode had equal merit with the ode itself, it must have been the most excellent performance of the kind in which poetry and music have, in modern times, united. Other pieces of the same nature have derived their greatest reputation from the perfection of the music that accompanied them, having in themselves little more merit than that of an ordinary ballad : but in this we have the whole soul and power of poetry—expression that, even without the aid of music, strikes to the heart ; and imagery of power enough to transport the attention, without the forceful alliance of corresponding sounds ! what, then, must have been the effect of these united !

It is very observable, that though the measure is the same, in which the musical efforts of Fear, Anger, and Despair are described, yet, by the variation of the cadence, the character and operation of each is strongly expressed: thus particularly of Despair:

“ With woful measures wan Despair —
Low, sullen sounds his grief beguiled,
A solemn, strange, and mingled air,
'Twas sad by fits, by starts 'twas wild.”

He must be a very unskilful composer who could not catch the power of imitative harmony from these lines!

The picture of Hope that follows this is beautiful almost beyond imitation. By the united powers of imagery and harmony, that delightful being is exhibited with all the charms and graces that pleasure and fancy have appropriated to her:

*Relegat, qui semel percurrit ;
Qui nunquam legit, legat.*

“ But thou, O Hope, with eyes so fair,
What was thy delighted measure !
Still it whisper'd promised pleasure,
And bade the lovely scenes at distance hail !
Still would her touch the strain prolong,
And from the rocks, the woods, the vale,
She call'd on Echo still through all the song ;
And where her sweetest theme she chose,
A soft responsive voice was heard at every close,
And Hope enchanted smiled, and waved her golden hair.”

In what an exalted light does the above stanza place this great master of poetical imagery and harmony! what varied sweetness of numbers! what delicacy of judgment and expression! how characteristically does Hope prolong her strain, repeat her soothing closes, call upon her associate Echo for the same purposes, and display every pleasing grace peculiar to her!

“And Hope enchanted smiled, and waved her golden hair.”

Legat, qui nunquam legit ;
Qui semel percurrit, relegat.

The descriptions of Joy, Jealousy, and Revenge are excellent, though not equally so. Those of Melancholy and Cheerfulness are superior to every thing of the kind; and, upon the whole, there may be very little hazard in asserting, that this is the finest ode in the English language.

AN EPISTLE

TO SIR THOMAS HANMER, ON HIS EDITION OF SHAKESPEARE'S WORKS.

THIS poem was written by our author at the university, about the time when Sir Thomas Hanmer's pompous edition of Shakespeare was printed at Oxford. If it has not so much merit as the rest of his poems, it has still more than the subject deserves. The versification is easy and genteel, and the allusions always poetical. The character of the poet Fletcher in particular is very justly drawn in this epistle.

DIRGE IN CYMBELINE.

ODE ON THE DEATH OF THOMSON.

MR. COLLINS had skill to complain. Of that mournful melody, and those tender images, which are the distinguishing excellencies of such pieces as bewail departed friendship, or beauty, he was an almost unequaled master. He knew perfectly to exhibit such circumstances, peculiar to the objects, as awaken the influences of pity; and while, from his own great sensibility, he felt what he wrote, he naturally addressed himself to the feelings of others.

To read such lines as the following, all-beautiful and tender as they are, without corresponding emotions of pity, is surely impossible :

“ The tender thought on thee shall dwell ;
Each lonely scene shall thee restore,
For thee the tear be duly shed ,
Beloved till life can charm no more,
And mourn'd till Pity's self be dead.”

The Ode on the Death of Thomson seems to have been written in an excursion to Richmond by water. The rural scenery has a proper effect in an ode to the memory of a poet, much of whose merit lay in descriptions of the same kind; and the appellations of "Druid," and "meek Nature's child," are happily characteristic. For the better understanding of this ode, it is necessary to remember, that Mr. Thomson lies buried in the church of Richmond.
